Wallace Group Confers Today as Inspectors Reach Areas.

Hopkins, Officials To Meet in St. Paul

Showers Bring Little Relief; High Price Fears Discounted.

While farmers in more than a score of drought-stricken States crowded their churches yesterday and prayed for rain, agricultural and relief officials here were considering plans for the launching of a vast drought-relief program before the end of the week.

The groundwork for this co-ordinated governmental drive to relieve the distress of the thousands of farmers facing ruin because of weeks of unbroken, crop-withering heat is expected to be laid today at the first formal meeting of the drought-relief committee named Saturday by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace. Yesterday the committee members busied themselves with individual plans and informal discussions of the problem among themselves.

Government agents are inspecting the afflicted areas which extend, with spotted breaks, virtually from the Appalachians to the Rockies, and the scope of the relief program that is finally put into effect is expected to depend on their reports—and on how long it will be before the baking fields are freshened by rains.

Light showers were forecast yesterday by the Weather Bureau for the Dakotas, Minnesota and Iowa, which are among the States that have been most sorely stricken, but heavier rains will be required, the bureau said, if crops are to be saved and entire counties are to be kept off the dole.

Fear for Corn Crop.

The scroching sweep of a 100-degree sun has already shriveled a good part of the spring wheat crop and the pasture in the Northwest, and unless soaking rains arrive in the next two weeks officials fear serious damage will be done to the corn crop in the States further West.

Although no plan of action has yet been decided upon, the relief program is expected to include some or all of the following features:

First, modification of the soil-conservation program to give drought afflicted farmers greater leeway in the planting of the crops, yet assuring them their benefit payments.

Second, an expansion of direct and work relief in the area by increased expenditure of WPA funds, to be drawn from the new relief appropriation.

Third, a cattle-buying program in areas where feed crops have been destroyed. If such a program is adopted, officials expect it to be confined to a few regions and to be nowhere as extensive as the 1934 program when more than 1,000,000 head of cattle were purchased.

Fourth, distribution of emergency feed by the Federal Surplus Commodity Corporation. Almost 10,000 tons of such feed has already been made available to the stricken farmers through State relief agencies.

Rates to Be Cut.

Fifth, lowering of freight rates to permit farmers to ship their livestock out to good pastures and back again when the drought has broken. One railroad, the Northern Pacific, has already agreed to such a reduction and the other railroads are reported to have assured Secretary Wallace of their co-operation if the need grows.

Under present plans the "human relief" problem is to be handled by the WPA through the setting up of work relief projects in the afflicted areas and the Resettlement Administration through its loans and grant to stricken families. Estimates of the number of families who may need aid range as high as 75,000.

Joseph L. Dailey, director of the rehabilitation division of the Resettlement Administration and a member of the drought-relief committee appointed by Wallace, is scheduled to reach Lincoln, Nebr., today for a conference with W. W. Alexander, also of the RA, preliminary to an

Youth Drowns as Canoe Upsets; Friend Reaches Potomac Shore

The youth's companion, Stuart B. Wright, of 1202 Delafield place northwest, clung to the canoe and made his way to shore safely.

Ridlebaugh struck out for the Virginia shore when the frail craft upset. He went down within 15 or 20 feet of safety.

Wright left the canoe and tried to reach his friend, but, unable to make any headway against the strong current, he was forced to return to the canoe.

Other canoeists, including William Harris and Franklin Rothenbush, of 2316 Nineteenth street northwest, paddled to the scene, but arrived too late to effect a rescue.

Wright was swept 300 or 400 yards downstream before he was able to make a landing a short distance above Chain Bridge.

He and Ridlebaugh were Sigma Nu Fraternity brothers at George Washington University.

Ridlebaugh was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard H. Ridlebaugh, of 812 Somerset place northwest.

JACK H. RIDLEBAUGH.

He was to have graduated from George Washington University in October, having attended school there for the last two years. He attended Drexel Institute in Philadelphia before moving here with his family two years ago.

His body was still unrecovered last night.

100 Neighbors Hail Roosevelt At Hyde Park

He Calls Franklin Field Ovation One of Greatest Events of His Life.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., June 28.—Fresh from one of the "greatest scenes" he ever witnessed, President Roosevelt returned home for a week-end of rest today and was accorded a surprise welcome by fellow townsmen.

As he entered the grounds of the ancestral estate after a motor drive from Highlands, on the west bank of the Hudson, more than 100 members of the Roosevelt Home Club of Hyde Park and nearby Poughkeepsie waved and shouted greetings.

Before entering the house to have breakfast with members of his family and Gov. and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, the President told the welcoming group they had missed one of the "greatest scenes" in political history.

Describes Rally.

He described the scene last night at Philadelphia, where, in accepting renomination by acclamation of the Democratic National Convention, before more than 100,000 cheering delegates and citizens in the University of Pennsylvania bowl, he said he was "enlisted for the duration of the war" against economic royalists" who "hide behind the flag and the Constitution" in their quest for power.

Congratulatory messages began arriving soon after the President-nominee reached Hyde Park.

The Roosevelt Home Club, headeed by Erden D. Ackert, invited the President and Mrs. Roosevelt to its seventh annual celebration July 11 at the nearby home of Moses W. Smith, chairman of the committee arranging for the event. Smith, an old friend of the family, said the President had accepted and fixed the date himself. It is a non-partisian club, he said.

Gov. Lehman, who announced some time ago he would not seek re-election, but who has been urged repeatedly by the President to reconsider, accompanied Mr. Roosevelt here on his special train.

Silent on Making Race.

He had no statement to make before he left by motor with his wife for their summer home at White Plains. But, through Marvin H. McIntyre, a Presidential secretary, he said he had not discussed politics at the Roosevelt breakfast table—only the "events of the convention."

Interviewed at the depot at Highlands, Lehman said he "just had a family chat" on the train.

Lehman told the Associated Press at the Philadelphia depot last night that he was "grateful" for the reception given him at the convention, but he would not indicate, in view of that and the New York delegation's formal request that he seek a third term, whether he was

Landon, Family Attend Service High in Rockies

G. O. P. Nominee Spends Day Resting and Reading at Ranch.

By the Associated Press.

Estes Park, Colo., June 28.—Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, went up into the high Rocky Mountains today to attend church services at the Estes Park conference of the Young Men's Christian Association.

There the Rev. Walter M. Horton, professor of the philosophy of Christianity at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, recalled today was the 100th anniversary of the death of James Madison, and said:

"If Madison could return to the America of today he would at first think the American people had become magicians, but if he stayed a while he would begin to see we are no longer masters of our own destiny.

"The powers of the American people in 100 years have become too great for their moral capacity to control—a fact that Madison would recognize."

Gov. Landon was accompanied by Mrs. Landon, his mother-in-law, Mrs. Samuel E. Cobb, and his 19-year-old daughter, Peggy Ann.

The Kansas Governor spent a quiet day at his vacation ranch in the shadow of the Rockies, reading and resting. There were no engagements or visitors. He dined on lamb chops, string beans and raspberries, which he purchased himself at the village grocery Saturday. He and his daughter rode up a peak behind the ranch home Saturday afternoon.

An incident of the Governor's vacation that brought smiles today concerned Matilda and Maggie, colored servants brought by the Landons from Topeka.

The servants slept with windows and doors of their room locked—and not because of the chill mountain air.

Army-less Puerto Rico Free of U. S. Proposed

San Juan, Puerto Rico, June 28 (AP).—An army-less Puerto Rican republic, friendly with but free from the United States, was proposed today by Senator Luis Munoz Marin. In a manifesto he contended that without an army the island would escape the political troubles which he said lead to personal government and dictatorships in some of the Latin-American nations.

Wedding of Veteran, 99, Is Off; Bride-to-Be, 63, 'Takes a Walk'

By the United Press.

Old Forge, N. Y., June 28.—The 63-year-old bride-to-be of Charles Jeannette, 99, Civil War veteran, "took a walk" and the celebrated wedding scheduled today in the rectory of St. Bartholomew's Church was called off.

Mrs. Ella Blanche Manning, the old veteran's prospective bride, silenced the wedding bells today after consultation with members of her family, and immediately left the village.

"Perhaps she thought I was a bit too old to marry," Jeannette said.

He was outwardly disappointed, as he had planned the wedding several weeks. He had laid out his Civil War uniform and had made other necessary preparations.

Jeannette said Mrs. Manning, whom he had selected from more than 100 applicants after announceing he waned to marry for the third time before he reached 100, informed him of her unexpecetd decision last night.

Their plans for a trip, however, were not canceled—even though they went separate ways.

On his trip, he was accompanied by 12-year-old twins, Margaret and Marion Ray, who were to have been his flower girls, and Joseph F. Grady, secretary of the Central Adirondack Association.

The boat on which he made the trip, which was to have been his honeymoon, was donated by a navigation company. At the first lake, the old vet will be feted by a dinner, previously planned as the wedding dinner.

Jeanette said he had no plans for the future.

"Will you go through the applications again?" he was asked.

He refused to comment.

Steel to Fight Labor's Drive On Open Shop

Industry Throws All Its Resources Into Battle on Lewis' Move.

By the United Press.

New York, June 28.—The Nation's $5,000,000,000 steel industry tonight threw all its mighty resources into a battle with organized labor to maintain an open shop for its 500,000 employes.

The decision for a finish fight was announced by the American Iron and Steel Institute, representing more than 95 per cent of the industry, in answer to a drive to unionize steel employes inaugurated under the leadership of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers Union.

"The steel industry will use its resources to the best of its ability to protect its employes and their families from intimidation, coercion and violence and to aid them in maintaining collective bargaining free from interference from any source," the institute announced.

Inevitable Result.

The institute called attention to a statement by Morris Childs, of the Communist Party, that "a serious steel strike will be an almost inevitable result of efforts to organize the industry by the committee for industrial organization," Lewis' group. Childs, at the ninth convention of the Communist Party last week, made the foregoing statement and added:

"The Communists are ready to play an important role in that battle. Our task is to mobilize our entire force behind the steel workers and place our organization in the mills to be ready for the strike when it comes."

Labor considers the institute's challenge today to be more than a specific attack by steel employers and is shaping plans for a big battle to meet what labor leaders believe to be a united front by steel, rubber, automobile, textile and other mass production industries which are closely allied and which are the target of Lewis' industrial unionists.

Major Labor War.

The impending struggle may result in a major labor war as recovery dawns and in complete realignment of labor factions.

The institute did not say what means the steel industry would use to maintain an open shop. But it was indicated that the industry, emerging from one of the worst setbacks in its history, would use every resource at its command to combat unionism and maintain the open shop troditional to the steel industry.

The text of the institute's announcement follows:

"A campaign to unionize the employes of the steel industry has been announced.

"In order that the employes and the public may know the position of the steel industry in the face of the threatened drive, the industry makes this statement through the American Iron and Steel Institute.

"Persons and organizations not connected with the industry have taken charge of the campaign.

"There are many disturbing indications that the promoters of the campaign will employ coercion and intimidation of the employes in the industry and foment strikes.

"The object of the campaign is the 'closed shop,' which prohibits the employment of anyone not a union member. The steel industry will oppose any attempt to compel its employes to join a union or to pay tribute for the right to work.

"No employe in the steel industry has to join any organization to get or hold a job. Employment in the industry does not depend upon membership or nonmembership in any organization. Advancement depends on individual merit and effort. These are fundamental American principles to which the industry will steadfastly adhere.

"The steel industry believes in the principles of collective bargaining, and it is in effect throughout the industry.

Collective Bargaining.

"The overwhelming majority of the employes in the steel industry recently participated in annual elections under their own representa-

Dionne Parents Visit Quintuplets

Callander, Ontario, June 28 (AP).—Barred from their quintuplet daughters' nursery for three weeks by a measles quarantine at their own home, Oliva and Elzire Dionne were allowed to visit them today.

Their physician certified there was no danger they would carry germs from their older children to the quintuplets, who were 25 months old today.

The parents' visit was the only event marking the fact the quints have added another month to their lives. It is expected Oliva and Elzire, expecting another child shortly, will visit the five sisters daily.

About 1,500 persons watched the youngsters today in their two appearances. Each day last week between 1,000 and 1,200 visited them.

During the past month Emile, Marie, Cecile and Annette each cut a tooth. Yvonne didn't produce another, but she gained more weight, 12 ounces, than any of her sisters.

Emilie, Cecile and Annette each gained one-half inch in height. Cecile and Annette are now 32 inches tall and Emilie a half-inch shorter. Marie's height is unchanged at 30½ inches, while Yvonne gained one-fourth inch to reach 31¾.

Duty Bar to Liquor, Tourists Drink Stock

New York, June 28 (AP).—More than 100 Southern cruise passengers returned today to find Uncle Sam had reduced the free import liquor limit in their absence. As a result, there was much scurrying around for money to pay the extra levies, while many bottles were put in escrow.

The passengers, arriving on the Peten, had brought their liquor thinking the old rule permitting as much as $100 worth to come in duty free still stood. They found regulations imposed yesterday put the limit at one "wine gallon."

Adamant inspectors refused to take checks.

Meanwhile, about 800 passengers returning on the Carinthia, who received wireless notice of the new rate Saturday night, were reported by ship's officers to have opened up their stores and treated everybody to free drinks down to the last "wine gallon."

50,000 Recruits To Be Enrolled By CCC in July

Will Fill Vacancies Left by Men Returning to Private Employ.

Enlistment of 50,000 new Civilian Conservation Corps recruits during the first two weeks in July has been authorized by the Department of Emergency Conservation Work, Robert Fechner, director, announced yesterday.

The new recruits will fill the gaps left in CCC by discharge of men to allow them to obtain outside employment.

Operating program for the corps provides for an authorized strength of 350,000 men.

Selection of the new contingent was started last week by the Department of Labor, acting through State directors of selection. The Veterans' Administration, co-operating with its regional offices, is preparing for selection of war veterans who would enter CCC work.

Exactly 51,871 new men will be enrolled, and they will fall into these age classifications: 43,708 youths between the ages of 17 and 28; 5,421 war veterans, and 2,924 experienced men.

When the corps is at full strength it will consist of 325,000 juniors and 25,000 war veterans.

"Sole purpose of the July enrollment," Director Fechner announced, "is to fill vacancies in the corps. A survey shows that a considerable number of men find work in private industry and leave the camps. In April of this year, 8,430 members left the ranks to take private jobs."

Cover Up or Shave, Men Bathers Told

New York, June 28 (AP).—Shirtless bathing, permitted at Metropolitan beaches this year for the first time, tonight drew a protest from a group of women who said they had no desire to gaze upon hairy-chested men.

Grace Donohue, spokesman for the group, said a campaign had been started to compel men bathers either to denude their shaggy torsos or wear shirts.

"It is a fight to the finish," said Miss Donohue, a professional beauty expert. "In this year of campaigns, we are having our own drive and we won't stop until every hairy-chested man covers up on the beach or removes the curls from his chest."

With the aid of a score of other women, including several debutantes, she said she had obtained the active support of the Westchester Embassy Club. The club has posted a notice requesting "all male members having hair on their chests to refrain from swimming in the club pool without bathing shirts."

Duchess of Kent, Goes Under Knife

London, June 28 (AP).—The Duchess of Kent, wife of the youngest brother of King Edward, entered a London nursing home today to undergo a minor operation.

The duchess had been staying at her country home, Coppins, at Iver, Buckinghamshire. She traveled to London today and entered a Kensington nursing home this evening. No hint was given regarding the nature of her operation.

The Duchess of Kent, the former Princess Marina of Greece, married the fourth son of the late King George, November 29, 1934. They have a son, born October 9, 1935.

British Crowd Stones Auto of Fascist Chief

Manchester, England, June 28 (AP).—An angry crowd of 3,000 stoned the automobile of Sir Oswald Mosley, leader of the British Fascist Party, and smashed windows at the Fascist club at Hulme tonight.

The disturbance came after a Blackshirt demonstration at the town hall. Mosley, surrounded by a bodyguard, left he hall amidst the yells of the crowd, which tore down the Fascist's flag and tried to overturn and set fire to their trucks.

A senior police officer was among those injured. One person was sent to a hospital and eight were arrested.

Capital Girl, 5 Others Die In Air Wrecks

Plane Crashes.

Six persons, including a former Washington night club entertainer and a Virginia Army flier, were killed over the Nation yesterday.

Miss Mary Lee Butler, of Washington, and Al Stanley, Montgomery, Ala., band leader, were drowned and a second man injured when their plane fell into the surf off Daytona Beach, Fla.

Flying Cadet Joseph F. Feaganes, of Wytheville, Va., was killed in the crash of an Army pursuit plane in Ohio.

Two missing women fliers were found alive but injured on a mountain top in Washington State. Their plane was wrecked.

Plane Falls in Surf.

By the Associated Press.

Daytona Beach, Fla., June 28.—Two persons drowned and a third was injured when a small plane fell into the surf here today.

The dead are Al Stanley, 29, band leader, of Montgomery, Ala., and Miss Mary Lee Butler, 20, former Washington night club entertainer.

They were trapped in the cockpit of the two-seater plane and were drowned before lifeguards or bathers could reach the wreckage, 400 yards off shore.

Stroke Lander, pilot and owner of the plane, who was brought ashore with a broken nose and facial cuts, said the plane went into a tailspin.

Took Off From Beach.

Lander, assistant manager of a theater here, had taken off from the beach, scene of many automobile speed trails, shortly before the crash. Wings of the plane buckled up over the cockpit when the ship struck the water from a low altitude.

Stanley had been playing at a night club here for the last three years. He is survived by his wife and a daughter, Francis, 10, and one sister.

Miss Butler, employed in the night club, where the Stanley Band played, is survived by a sister in Washington, D. C.

Lander obtained his pilot's license four months ago and had been making frequent flights in his ship.

Night Club Entertainer.

Miss Butler formerly was a night club entertainer in Washington. She also was hostess for a night club while in Daytona Beach, relatives here said.

The girl's sister, Mrs. J. A. Mathis, of 1124 Tenth street northwest, left for her home in Pittsboro, N. C., early this morning after she received word of her sister's crash.

Mary Lee's body will be taken to Pittsboro for burial.

Virginian Is Killed.

Marysville, Ohio, June 28 (AP).—An army pursuit plane crashed on a farm 9 miles southwest of Marysville today, killing its youthful pilot, Flying Cadet Joseph F. Feaganes, of Selfridge Field, Mich.

John Thiergarten, on whose farm the plane fell, said it was flying low toward the southeast, apparently at full speed, when it suddenly veered into the ground, bounced nearly 500 yards and then struck again with such force that the motor was torn loose.

Thiergarten and his hired hand pulled Feaganes from the wreckage of the plane, and he was taken to nearby Mechanicsburg, where he died as he was carried into a doctor's office.

At Dayton Army authorities said Feaganes, whose home was in Wytheville, Va., was flying one of four planes which left Patterson

Two Cousins Fight for Bonds; Each Offers 'Ownership Story'

By the Associated Press.

Mize, Miss., June 28.—The mystery of the $143,000 in British government bonds the postman left here unexpectedly deepened today when two cousins of the same name claimed the fortune.

The parcel post package addressed to "Roy Ford" was delivered to the town druggist of that name last week, but Farmer Roy Ford, who lives near here, came forward today to claim the bonds.

Pending a decision as to the rightful owner, the bonds are now in the hands of postal inspectors, presumably at New Orleans.

The druggist, maintaining at first "there must have been a mistake," was believed to have sent them to New Orleans on the advice of friends.

Meanwhile, Farmer Roy Ford said published reports he won the money on a lottery ticket were about right.

"I am interested in lotteries," said Farmer Ford. Wary of Lottery laws, however, he declined to admit he bought a ticket on the recent Irish sweepstakes.

Both Roy Fords are World War veterans, the druggist having served in the Army, the farmer in the Navy. They are distant cousins.

Pharmacist Roy Ford, current reports say, bases his claim to the bonds on the story that he was gassed during the war, that a nurse was particularly attentive to him in a French hospital and that her father died, leaving her the bonds.

She since has died, the reports say, leaving him the bonds.

Farmer Ford said he has not seen the bonds but that "as soon as I heard of them benig received at the postoffice, I issued a stop order to the postal inspector until I could find out if the bonds were mine or not."

It was learned the bonds received last Thursday by registered mail

Zioncheck Flees Towson Hospital By Scaling Wall

Harris & Ewing.
REP. MARION A. ZIONCHECK.

Representative Escapes Into Woods Encircling Institution.

Score of Guards Search Until Dark

State, Baltimore Police Ask Motorists to Be on Lookout.

By Edward Fenton.
A Staff Correspondent.

Towson, Md., June 28.—Representative Marion A. Zioncheck today escaped from the Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital here shortly before noon. He scaled a 7-foot wire fence and fled hatless and coatless into the woods.

Nearby woods and highways were searched vainly until sundown by 25 attendants afoot and 3 in automobile. Maryland State police, asked to arrest him as "an escaped patient and a missing person," had discovered no clews as to his whereabouts late tonight.

They notified all filling station attendants to warn motorists not to pick up hitchhikers. An unconfirmed report from Ellicott City, Md., said Zioncheck had been sighted in a roadster with another man heading for Washington.

Fled While Exercising.

The Seattle (Wash.) Representative escaped about 11 a. m. while exercising in a yard of the hospital, to which he had been transferred Tuesday from Gallinger Hospital in Washington.

Zioncheck was tossing a medicine ball and chatting with four other patients in a yard at the rear of the men's ward at the time. Three attendants were on guard.

Suddenly he jumped to an iron rail on the porch, swung to a window ledge near the corner of the building and leaped several feet to the top of the wire fence.

His guards, taken by surprise, ran to a gate at the other end of the yeard. They reached it just in time to catch a fleeting glimpse of him as he disappeared into the woods.

Score Search Woods.

An alarm sent more than a score of attendants into the woods which make up most of the hospital's 700 acres. They searched for the Congressman until it was too dark to see.

It was not until 9 p. m. that they turned to the State police for aid. The latter, acting on the belief, expressed by hospital officials, that Zioncheck had not letf the grounds, sent several troopers to patrol the highways nearby.

Baltimore City police were not asked for aid in the hunt. They said they could not arrest Zioncheck as a "missing person" because he was not a minor. They added that they would not arrest him until they were certain that he had been legally committed for insanity.

Dr. Arthur E. Pattrell, assistant superintendent, scouted rumors that Zioncheck had escaped in a waiting automobile. He said it would have been impossible for him to have known at what time he would be exercising. He explained the escape was an "impulse of an elated and overactive individual."

"I don't regard him as a dangerous man," Dr. Pattrell added. "But if anyone tried to bring him back here he might prove dangerous."

He said he had not had the Congressman at the hospital long enough to diagnose his illness.

Had No Funds, Is Belief.

Zioncheck did not have any funds with him, it was believed. He was dressed in a white shirt, dark blue trousers and tennis shoes.

The yard from which he escaped is used for patients "under restraint." An inward-jutting ledge at the top of the 7-foot fence was supposed to make it escape-proof.

Dr. Pattrell said the worst result of the escape probably would be on the "sick man's condition." He described Zioncheck as "inclined to be rather friendly with those with whom he comes in contact."

Zioncheck Safe If He Behaves, D. C. Police Say

Officers Calm but Phone Operator Is Agitated as He Escapes.

Representative Marion A. Zioncheck, who escaped yesterday from a private sanitarium at Towson, Md., will be ignored by Washington police if he returns here, providing he behaves himself.

Lieut. Clarence Talley, in charge of the detective bureau last night, said he was notified officially of the Representative's escape at about 10 p. m. by Maryland State police.

Talley said that the Maryland officers telephoned to request him to send out a lookout ordering Washington policemen to watch out for Zioncheck and arrest him. The police lieutenant said he would send no lookout because the Representative was not a fugitive from justice.

Before the official notification, Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, had said that he saw no reason for Washington authorities to molest Zioncheck as long as he is lawabiding.

Inspector Thompson pointed out that the young legislator had been discharged from Gallinger Hospital and that a lunacy warrant against him was nolle prossed before he was removed to the private sanitarium.

"Of course, if he does anything unusual, like speeding 80 miles an hour, we'd have to pick him up," said one police officer. "But that would be only a traffic violation."

The switchboard operator at Harvard Hall, the apartment house where Zioncheck had leased and wrecked a sub-let flat in the playboy days before he was taken to Gallinger, became apprehensive the minute she learned the originator of the Zioncheck zipper—a potent drink of rum, mint and honey—was loose again.

She asked to be informed immediately if he turned up in Washington.

Will Call Police.

"The apartment is locked and bolted," she said. "But I don't want to take any chances of him breaking the door down. I'll call the police right away."

Mrs. Zioncheck, who was Rubye Louise Nix, a PWA stenographer, before her marriage to the Congressman a couple of months ago, visited friends at Harvard Hall last Friday afternoon. Police yesterday were ordered to serve her with a warrant charging assault on Mrs. Benjamin Young, the Zioncheck landlady.

Mrs. Zioncheck, however, could not be found and her attorney, Max Ammerman, said he was trying to find her.

Ammerman said he was certain she knows nothing of her husband's Currency Issue Is Paramount, Lemke Asserts

Union Candidate Pledges 'Clean' Race; to Open Chicago Offices.

By the Associated Press.

Burlington, Iowa, June 28.—Representative William Lemke (Republican), North Dakota, candidate for President on the new Union Party ticket, today said he would begin setting up the party machinery this week for a "clean" campaign in which the "money issue" would be paramount.

The co-author of the Frazier-Lemke farm bills announced he would open national headquarters in Chicago within the week.

The party would take form along traditional political lines, Lemke said, with a national committee and state committees "wherever possible."

Spontaneous Movement.

"The two major parties gather in contributions from wealthy corporations and individuals and pass it out to paid party workers," he said.

"The Union Party will work just the other way. It will be a spontaneous movement working its way up from the bottom to the top."

Lemke disclosed his plans to farmer friends—he says "at least 85 per cent of the farmers of the Nation are my personal friends"—before addressing a farm gathering at Burlington.

He said his campaign would not begin until August, but when it did it would be centered on "the money issue" with "all mud slinging" strictly barred.

"The money question is at the root of our whole depression problem," he declared, "There has never been overproduction in this country—there has been only underconsumption because of inadequate purchasing power."

The Representative said a national bank of issue—one of the planks in his platform—would correct the trouble by maintaining a proper balance of credit. Such a bank, he said, would permit the Government to borrow needed money without paying interest "to the coupon clippers" and thus increasing taxation.

The North Dakotan emphasized he was not out to "stop" either President Roosevelt or Republican Presidential nominee Gov. Alf M. Landon, but was in the fight to win.

He said he had "no doubt at all" that he would be victorious despite his loose-knit organization "if we can get the facts out to the people."

Friendly Groups.

He said the Union Party ticket would appear "in virtually every State" in November in spite of ballot laws in some States which prohibit filing of a party slate so close to election. "Different groups" friendly to his candidacy—groups that had already filed tickets under other party names—would put his name before the voters, he said.

These groups, he reported, included "local farm and labor groups." (He motored here from Chicago with Fred Winteroth, secretary of the Illinois Farmers Union). The Townsendp ension clubs (he will address their annual convention at Cleveland on July 19); the share-the-wealth groups of the late Huey P. Long, and Father Charles Coughlin's Union for Social Justice.

None of these groups has "merged" or "accepted each other's ideas entirely," Lemke said, but are merely combining forces for the campaign on common ground.

Rumanian Leader Assails Germany

Bucharest, Rumania, June 28 (AP).—Former Premier Julius Maniu, in a speech in the Vintzul district today, declared Germany's policy was one of attack and decried the influence of Mme. Magda Lupescu in Rumanian affairs.

Several thousand residents of the district, which elected Maniu to Parliament for 30 years, heard the former head of the National Peasants Party applaud French foreign policy and advocate Franco-Rumanian co-operation. He declared that only by that means could Rumania preserve democracy and keep peace on its frontiers.

He named Mme. Lupescu, King Carol's intimate friend, in a sharp attack on the Rumanian dictatorship, assailing "those who work against the people because the people stand for peace and democracy."

Picket Leaders Lift Ban on Steel Officials

Portsmouth, Ohio, June 28 (AP).—Almost 200 executives and maintenance employes of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, under virtual siege in the strike-bound plant here since May 22, were free to go and come as they pleased today following an offer of the joint strike committee to allow them to pass through picket lines.

Sheriff Arthur Oakes said members of the committe agreed at a law-enforcement conference to allow food to be taken into the plant, and offered to allow superintendents, foremen and men engaged in protecting machinery inside the steel works from depreciation during the strike, free passage through their lines.

The offer followed a warning by Oakes that he was not interested in halting the strike or interfering with either side, but was ready to use force against violence.

Politics and People

President Roosevelt at His Best in Making His Speech of Acceptance.

By Franklyn Waltman

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—President Roosevelt was at his best in his speech accepting renomination as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. This address, couched in gracious, restrained language, marked by a high idealism in the best liberal sense, deserves a place among the great American state papers.

WALTMAN.

Mr. Roosevelt is said to have rejected the advice of his counselors in writing this address. They had urged that he make what is termed a fighting speech—that is, one in which he would deal with personalities and lay down a blistering heat on his Republican opponents as well as on the dissenters within his own party.

The President did well to reject such advice. Indeed, it seems he needs new advisers, for compared with his recent Baltimore and New York addresses, marked by inaccuracies, economic fallacies and appeals to moronic minds—speeches said to have been written by these advisers—the acceptance address was a superb, masterful political paper.

So much can be said of it because it is doubtful if anyone can profitably make political capital out of it. If the Republicans propose to answer the liberal philosophy set forth in that address without getting hurt in the encounter, they will need a genius with qualifications far greater than those ever attributed to the reputedly omnipotent Charles Michelson.

Men can disagree with such ideals, objectives and aspirations as set forth by the President as so much rubbish and as an Utopian utterance in a practical, realistic world. But no political candidate or party manager can make this answer, for such a course is that of reaction and destructive of support. It is necessary that all leaders of the people oppose sin, even though they fully realize the frailties of human nature.

The Republicans, of course, can point out that objectives and ideals constitute one thing; methods of achieving such ends another. They can undertake to brand Mr. Roosevelt as insincere in what he said in his acceptance speech in view of the policies he has pursued during the last three years.

The way is open to them to hail with enthusiasm Mr. Roosevelt's assertion that "now, as always, the flag and the Constitution stand for democracy, not tyranny; for freedom, not subjection, and against a dictatorship by mob rule and the overprivileged alike." Then they can proceed to point out that under the New Deal Mr. Roosevelt undertook to subject the industry and agriculture of this country to a Federal bureaucracy which at times became tyrannical, as in the Texas hot oil case, the incident of the Pennsylvania battery man and that of the New Jersey tailor.

Since the President insisted throughout his Administration that he must be left as free as a football quarterback to change and shift his course, one utterance by him is no proof of his intentions. Next month he may be running in the opposite direction.

But if the Roosevelt acceptance speech means anything at all, it means he has undergone a conversion—one which will warm the hearts of many of those within his party who in the past regarded themselves as liberals, but who now have been classed as reactionaries because they fail to see the difference between industrial barons and a Federal bureaucracy crushing individual initiative.

If the President meant what he said in the phrase that "if the average citizen is guaranteed equal opportunity in the polling place, he must have equal opportunity in the market place," he turned his back on such coercive measures as NRA and the Bankhead cotton contral act, for those measures worked out to deny to the "average citizen"—the little man, if you please—the "equal opportunity in the market place" which Mr. Roosevelt promised.

Perhaps Mr. Roosevelt intended in his acceptance speech to make it clear to the country that he had abandoned efforts at the regimentation of commerce and agriculture, which is inherent in a planned economy. Perhaps he intended to convey that thought when he asserted that "governments can err—Presidents do make mistakes" and than craved indulgence for his mistakes by invoking the words of Dante that "divine justice weighs the sins of the cold-blooded and the sins of the warm-hearted on different scales."

Perhaps he meant to signal a permanent change in his course of action when he sought further expiation for his mistaken policies by asserting that "better the occasional faults of a government that lives in a spirit of charity than the consistent omissions of a government frozen in the ice of its own indifference."

Perhaps, shrewd and skillful detector of the current of public opinion that he is, Mr. Roosevelt has discovered that a majority of the people of this country are as ready to do battle today against political autocrats seeking to restrain free enterprise and economic freedom as they were in the eighteenth century royalists who sought to restrain their political liberties.

But that remains to be seen. Many of us remember that four years ago we applauded loudly when Mr. Roosevelt asserted that "I share the President's (Hoover) complaint against regimentation; but unlike him, I dislike it not only when it is carried on by an informal group amounting to an economic Government of the United States, but when it is done by the Government of the United States itself."

Corporate Income Shows 19.72% Rise

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Morgenthau reported tonight that corporations had an aggregate gross income of $100,134,350,000 in 1934, a gain of 19.72 per cent over the $83,642,421,000 figure the year before.

The data was compiled from 528,882 returns filed by corporations, comprising 145,089 showing a net income, 324,671 with no net income, and 59,122 for inactive corporations.

Corporations showing a net income for the year grossed $62,839,394,000 in 1934, the highest reported since 1930. Those firms reporting no net income for the year, however, had an aggregate gross income of $37,294,956,000.

The statutory net income of corporations reporting net income amounted to $4,264,917,000 in 1934 as compared with $2,985,972,000 the previous year, a gain of 42.83 per cent.

The statutory net deficit of corporations reporting no net income for the year amounted to $4,150,694,000, a decrease of $1,382,645,000 or 24.99 per cent under the previous year.

Dr. Mark Francis, College Dean, Dies

He was generally known as "father of the Texas cattle industry."

Burial will be at Shandon, Ohio, his family home.

Dr. Francis is survived by his wife; one son, W. B. Francis and a grandson, Bebb Francis, of Dallas; two brothers, Dr. John Francis, of Hamilton, Ohio, and Dr. Edward Francis, of Washington, D. C.; three sisters, Miss Eliza Francis, Shandon, Ohio, Mrs. Mary Evans, Terryville, Conn., and Mrs. Annie Crafts, Oberlin, Ohio.

He was graduated from Ohio State University in 1887.

On the seventy-fifth anniversary of Ohio State, Dr. W. O. Thompson, then president of the school, said: "If Ohio State University had trained but one man in the years of its existence, and that man was Dr. Mark Francis, of Texas, it had given back to its people more than they had expended upon it in three-quarters of a century of its existence."

Taber Expects Federal Debt Of 40 Billions

Forecasts 'Stripped' Treasury by Jan. 1 to Meet Farley's Demands.

By the Associated Press.

Accumulated Government liabilities of approximately $40,000,000,000 by next January were predicted yesterday by Representative John Taber, of New York, as ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Committee.

He made the forecast in a statement declaring the Treasury would be "stripped" by that time "to meet the exorbitant election demands of General Farley (Postmaster General James A. Farley), Democratic national chairman.

Stating there had been spent by the Roosevelt Administration since March 4, 1933, approximately $25,000,000,000, Taber said "it is manifest that the only safety for the people is the retirement of the Roosevelt Administration."

Recapitulating the recent Congress' allowances out of the Treasury, the New Yorker said they totaled upward of $20,000,000,000—"the largest of any peace time Congress."

Nearly All New Funds.

The last session just ended, he estimated, appropriated $10,129,710,521, all of which he said comprised direct new appropriatiions except $7,505,957,521 in so-called permanent annually recurring appropriations allowed without hearings, and approximately $375,000,000 of previously allowed but unexpended funds.

In the first session of the Seventy-Fourth Congress, Taber said the over-all total was $10,459,756,227, of which $2,200,101,127 was in the automatically recurring permanent appropriations and nearly $1,000,000,000 in reappropriations.

"The reason that the appropriations for the second session are lower than those for the first session is that there was about $3,000,000,000 more appropriated last year for so-called relief," he explained.

"Of course, last year's appropriations were intended to cover a 12-month period, while this year it is openly stated that the wasteful and inefficient relief for which we have appropriated funds in the second session will all be expended by January 1, 1937. * * *

Sees Treasury Stripped.

"If we were to continue fraudulent relief appropriations on the same basis that they have been carried on under the Roosevelt Administration after January 1, next, for the rest of the fiscal year 1937, a deficiency bill of $2,500,000,000 for that purpose would be in order by January 1, because the Treasury will be stripped by that time to meet the exorbitant election demands of Gen. Farley.

"In other words, if appropriations had been on the same basis as last year to carry the fraudulent relief all through the year the appropriations for this session would have been at least $1,000,000,000 more than the appropriations for last season. It also means that if Federal relief of any description is carried on beyond January 1 there must be further large appropriations in January."

"The two governments, the United States and Canada, are handling this and I'm waiting until they settle the matter before saying anything," commented druggist Ford.

Postmaster Tanner was noncommittal.

"I can't tell you anything, boys," he said. "Postal regulations won't allow it."

U. S. Completes Relief Program For Next Year

WPA Wages Increased Over Last Fall; Ickes and Hopkins End Feud.

By the Associated Press.

With controversy in the relief high command composed, the Administration sets forth on its third huge relief and public works program this week.

Plans for separate programs employing more than 3,000,000 persons during the 12 months beginning July 1 were completed with announcement by Administrator Harry L. Hopkins yesterday that WPA wages would average $52 a month. This rate was the same as that for March and about $2 more than at the start of the WPA program last fall.

Some deductions in working hours will result from formal institution of the prevailing hourly wage, to be determined by local administrators. This is intended to prevent a worker from earning more than the maximum allowed under the "security" wage.

The long disagreement between Hopkins and Secretary Ickes, Public Works Administration chief, headed into settlement under impetus of a Congressional enactment. Ickes, under the new relief measure, was freed from the necessity of asking Hopkins to approve new PWA projects. Congress, in the session just ended, made a direct appropriation for his agency. By the same token, Hopkins no longer can get extra money to run his larger WPA by requesting President Roosevelt to cancel PWA allotments.

Under the first $3,300,000,000 appropriation for relief, nearly half a billion dollars was taken from Ickes to finance Hopkins' civil works administration. Last summer a running battle over the distribution of the $4,000,000,000 work relief appropriation was settled when Hopkins got $1,400,000,000 compared with the $336,000,000 total for PWA non-Federal and low-cost housing projects.

The President asked Congress this year for $1,500,000,000 specifically to continue WPA—with nothing for PWA. Amended to provide $1,425,000,000 allotted at the President's discretion, the new appropriation still would have left PWA out in the cold. Senate friends of PWA, however, inserted an amendment authorizing Ickes to make $300,000,000 in grants to communities from proceeds of earlier loans.

Accepted by the President, since the amendment did not require additional appropriations, the new system freed Ickes from having to convince Hopkins that there was enough relief labor in the particular community to build the project. Last year more than 2,500 projects approved by Ickes were left stranded because of Hopkins' veto.

Ickes has declined to commit his agency to any specific number of projects or amount of expenditure for the new PWA program, saying only that the previous policy of aiding "thousands of serviceable public facilities now in use and other thousands now under construction" had been found sound and would be continued.

Moses Announces Senate Candidacy

Concord, N. H., June 28 (AP).—Former United States Senator George H. Moses announced tonight his candidacy for the Republican nomination for the Senate.

In the party primary in September he will oppose Senator Henry W. Keyes, who seeks re-election, and Gov. H. Styles Bridges.

Senator Moses in a statement said:

"I have been reluctant to enter the field against Senator Keyes, with whom I served for so many years. However, another contestant has appeared, and I can see no sound reason to permit him to occupy the field alone.

"The State has seen both Senator Keyes and me in the Senate and can readily make a choice between us without undue pressure for either. Such pressure I shall not seek to induce.

"Bearing in mind my experience in the Senate * * * the choice between Gov. Bridges and me seems equally simple. I say this with all due respect to the Governor and a full appreciation of his excellent qualities."

tion plans and elected their representatives for collective bargaining. The elections were conducted by the employes themselves by secret ballot. One of the purposes of the announced campaign is to overthrow those plans and the representatives so elected.

"The steel industry is recovering from six years of depression and huge losses, and the employes are now beginning to receive benefits of increased operations. Any interruption of the forward movement will seriously injure the employes and their families and all businesses dependent upon the industry, and will endanger the welfare of the country.

"The announced drive, with its accompanying agitation for industrial strife, threatens such interruption."

with the aid of Instalment Buying

Nowadays a man takes pride in his car, not so much for what it costs as for what it does—50,000 miles without a major adjustment is neither a boast nor a rare experience. Cars have crossed the continent without once stopping their engines.

How different from the get-out-and-crawl-under days, when those who ventured beyond the city limits frequently had to walk home! In those times everyone who drove a car needed to be an experienced mechanic.

Easy to Drive—Easy to Own

Today reliable cars are both easy to drive and easy to own. Mass production and instalment buying have made super automobiles available to men of moderate means. As sales increased, prices dropped. Lower prices brought more buyers, and prices dropped again. Each price reduction benefited the cash customer as well as the instalment purchaser. And the days of roadside tinkering are gone, forever.

C. I. T. was one of the first to give responsible people the satisfaction of enjoying their cars while completing their purchase. Today, it is also helping to reduce household drudgery in the countless families where washing machines, vacuum cleaners, refrigerators and other modern home conveniences are being purchased on the C. I. T. Budget Plan. It benefits manufacturers, dealers and consumers alike. The C. I. T. Plan places the marvels of American civilization within the reach of the average pocketbook.

Nanking Force Aids Cantonese Against Japan

Kweichow Troops Leave Kai-Shek; War Near, Americans Report.

By the United Press.

Hongkong (Monday), June 29.—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek's crack troops in Kweichow Province revolted against the Nanking central government today and joined the Cantonese forces in a united front against Japan, Chinese newspapers reported here.

Gen. Chiang, military dictator of the Nanking government, previously ordered the troops into Kweichow to outflank the rebellious southwestern forces from Kwangsi and Kwangtung provinces and cut off their thrust into northern territory to declare war on Japanese garrisons in North China.

However, the southwestern troops, commanded from Canton by Gen. Chen Chi-Tang, overlord of Kwantung, are continuing their advance into Nanking-controlled Kweichow without resistance.

Believed Confirmation.

This was interpreted here as confirmation of the report that the Nanking forces in Kweichow have declared their own anti-Japanese movement. Thus the two armies now have a common objective.

This probably would delay the outbreak of civil war between central and southwestern China, which some observers are convinced is inevitable within a few weeks, as the Nanking force in Kweichow was estimated at more than 100,000 men.

If these troops have joined the southwestern forces, the Cantonese army would outnumber Gen. Chiang's army in the southern provinces by nearly 2 to 1.

War Fear Grows.

Shanghai, June 28 (AP).—American observers said tonight they feared an open Sino-Japanese rupture which might break into war as the result of growing tension between the two nations over recent occurrences in North and South China.

American commentators expressed the opinion that China and Japan were almost at the breaking point following the smuggling scandal in North China—for which the Chinese have blamed Japan—which was climaxed when Chinese customs cruisers fired on two Japanese boats.

"Never was the situation in China more explosive or potent of evil possibilities," said an American military observer. "Sino-Japanese relations are so tense that a serious incident might possibly cause Japan to declare hostilities.

"If war can be averted, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek (dictator of the central Chinese government at Nanking) will be as great a statesman and peacemaker as he is a politician and soldier."

Japanese officials characterized the action of Chinese customs boats in firing on Japanese cruisers in North China waters as "an affront to Japan's dignity and honor which cannot be disregarded."

C. K. Cadman Dies; Noted as Engineer

San Francisco, June 28 (AP).—Charles K. Cadman, 74, noted civil engineer, who helped build the Panama Canal, the Chicago commercial Loop subway and several other major projects, died today of pneumonia.

Cadman served for three years on the staff of Gen. G. W. Goethals, who directed the Panama Canal construction. He was head of the staff of Chief Engineer B. J. Arnold during the building of the subway in Chicago.

Development of the Colima line of the Mexican Railways was another of his projects. Still others were the Throckmorton dam of the San Francisco water supply system, the Santa Fe Railway tunnel at Pinole and the California Northern Railway at Eureka.

He devoted the last years of his life to safety engineering.

Survivors besides the widow are a daughter, Mrs. Florence C. Rahill, of New York, and two sons, Dr. Paul F. Cadman, of the University of California, and Charles M. Cadman, of San Francisco.

Trench Around House Prevents Mud Stains

If the mud splashes up on the lower part of your house and makes it look dirty and untidy, dig a trench around the house, close up to the foundation wall, about 8 inches deep and as wide as necessary to catch the dripping from the roof, and fill it with clean washed gravel. It will not interefere with planting, as shrubs and even flowers can be set beyond it.

whereabouts and that he was "pretty sure the Congressman doesn't know where she is, except that she's some place in Maryland with friends."

Saturday, when the police began their search for Mrs. Zioncheck, they were told she was living in Virginia. According to friends her mother and a sister came from Arkansas to be with her soon after Zioncheck was locked up in Gallinger.

Ammerman said he hoped the escaped Representative will keep out of Maryland and will spend the next few weeks resting up.

"He needs it," said the lawyer, "although he's no more insane than you or I."

Ammerman said he would advise Mrs. Zioncheck as soon as he found her to surrender on the warrant sworn out by Mrs. Young. He declared the landlady has no case and said:

"We can throw the complaint out of court in a hurry."

Zioncheck landed in Gallinger the first of June after a series of escapades which began with his arrest last New Year's Eve for plugging in all the telephones on a apartment house switchboard. A few months later he was arrested for speeding 70 miles an hour on a downtown street. After an all-day brawl with police he was put in jail and fined $45. Representative John J. O'Connor got him out by paying the fine.

Next Zioncheck married 20-year-old Miss Nix after a six-day acquaintance and the couple went on a flamboyant wedding trip to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands where their goings-on made daily headlines. Back in Washington, the Congressman continued his exploits, culminating in his leaving at the White House a brief case for President Roosevelt which contained empty beer bottles, a can full of ping pong balls and some moth balls.

Shortly after the visit to the White House, Zioncheck was locked up at Gallinger.

Seeking Landing Field.

They said that if Feaganes was flying southeast, the opposite direction to his proper course, it indicated that he was having trouble and probably was seeking a landing field, or that he planned a stop at Columbus, where 13 other pilots from his field were attending an air show.

Thiergarten said the pilot was unconscious but still alive when pulled from the plane.

Women Found Alive.

Camas, Wash., June 28 (AP).—Mrs. Bertha Robinson, who lives on a farm near here, reported tonight two missing women fliers were found alive, but injured, on Archer Mountain, 14 miles from here. The woman said an unidentified man asked her son, Louis, to help bring Mrs. Alyce Pashburg and Irma Westover, both of Portland, Oreg., from the wilds.

Details of the women's injuries were lacking.

Army fliers, who first sighted the wreckage this afternoon, said they saw what appeared to be a body in the rear cockpit, and said there was little doubt it was the women's plane.

Mrs. Pashburg was at the controls when they left Vancouver (Wash.) Airport early yesterday, headed for the air races at Spokane.

The ship, owned by Cecil Pounder, Portland, was entered in a cross-country race to Spokane. When it failed to appear there, searching parties swung into the air.

Searchers resumed their quest at dawn today.

Two Die in New York.

New York, June 28 (AP).—Two men were killed today in an airplane crash near Massapequa, Long Island.

The victims, Joseph Franco, 24, and Anthony Trinkea, 22, both of New York City, were flying in a small airplane rented at Roosevelt Field.

Franco had a limited commercial pilot's license.

Iowan Is Killed.

Clinton, Iowa, June 28 (AP).—Glenn Solberg, 24, of Maquoketa, Iowa, was killed and M. E. Felderman, 20, also of Maquoketa, was seriously injured when their airplane fell in a field near here today.

Felderman, piloting the plane, had just taken off from the Clinton Airport. Witnesses said they believed the ship was caught in cross winds causing it to nose to the ground.

Coughlin Principles Rejected by Students

St. Louis, June 28 (AP).—Catholic college students in a national convention here today declined to adopt resolutions embodying "social justice" principles advocated by the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin.

A minority group from Detroit, led by the Rev. Joseph A. Luther, dean of men at the University of Detroit, and aided by the Rev. Charles Leahy, S. J., of Los Angeles, had proposed a study of Father Coughlin's "16 points of social justice."

The opposition, led by a delegation from Boston College, succeeded in tabling the resolutions.

Cuba to Punish All Terrorists, Gomez Asserts

Political Disorders to Be Checked, President Says in Interview.

Copyright, 1936, by United Press.

Havana, June 28.—Terrorism and bomb-throwing in the name of political expediency, common in the stormy political history of Cuba, must be eradicated and no amnesties will be granted prisoners sentenced for terroristic crimes, President Miguel Mariano Gomez said tonight.

In an exclusive interview with the United Press—the first he has given since his inauguration—the new Cuban President also put at rest fears that new emergency taxes were contemplated.

"We are not considering any new taxes," he said.

An income tax, however, is to be studied for possible application in 1937-38.

Breaks Precedent.

The President, physically fit and in high spirits, broke a precedent of years standing when he received the United Press correspondent in his private chamber beyond the ears of any third party. During the provisional regime of Dr. Ramon Grau San Martin and in the Mendieta administration, it was impossible to speak alone to the Chief Executive.

"The amnesty problem is a complex one and requires a great deal of study," he said. "Generally, after a revolution, all those who have been accused of rebellion and sedition are freed and the problem is thus liquidated.

"Crimes of bloodshed cannot be pardoned. I cannot restore life to the dead. Kidnapers cannot hope to be given amnesty consideration. I cannot agree to any amnesty law which would say that nothing has happened. During the Machado government and afterward, many things have occurred that cannot be forgotten. I must comply with and respect Cuban society."

May Curtail Expenses.

Turning to fiscal matters, President Gomez reminded of the fact that the Congress has already received bills for $31,000,000, most of them unbudgeted. Dr. Gomez intimated that many of these bills would never become law. The implication was definitely that Cuban expenses will be curtailed.

Discussing the 1936-1937 budget, he remarked:

"We will have a year to study our finances, and for the 1937-1938 fiscal year I can promise that a better budget will be drawn up."

Dr. Gomez confirmed that the item of $8,700,000 under "income from special funds" in his new budget referred largely to seignorage profit on coinage of 12,000,000 to 20,000,000 silver pesos, which Congress has just authorized at the President's request.

Many Problems.

Dr. Gomez was frank in answering a question concerning the Cuban army's assumption of education and sanitation work with the civil population.

"It is for the welfare of the people, and the project's progress should not be interrupted. The situation will normalized in time. Once the government is enabled to re-establish complete normality to all aspects of civil life, military supervision of civil bureaus will be stopped. Civilian officials will replace army men eventually. But we have so many problems to solve, so much labor to perform, that we cannot accomplish all in a single day."

Col. E. N. Johnston, War Leader, Dead

San Francisco, June 28 (AP).—Col. Edward N. Johnston, 60, chief of American Chemical Warfare Service in France during the World War, died here today after a long illness.

The officer, retired for disability October 4, 1924, was graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1901. He organized and took to France the Twenty-third Engineers, comprised almost entirely of volunteers.

After the war, during which he received decorations from three governments, Col. Johnston drew plans for locks and dams on the Murray River in Australia at the request of the government there.

He also was consulting engineer in construction work at Long Beach, Calif., harbor.

Col. Johnston is survived by his wife, Blanche, three children, and a brother, Huntington Johnston, of Yakima, Wash. Burial will be in Arlington National Cemetery after funeral services, which still are to be arranged.

First Apples Shipped In Martinsburg Area

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 28.—First of the 1936 shipments of apples from this Shenandoah Valley fruit area left here yesterday. The shipment was a carload of Yellow Transparents, 2 inches and up, and were shipped from the Inwood station by Stuart Sherard, apple handler there.

Few others will be rolled before late next week from this section. A number of growers attempted a picking late this week, but found the 2-inch and better sizes too scarce to locate in marketable quantities and called off the pickers.

Recent rains are developing the fruit satisfactorily. There is no fear of the "bottom dropping out of the market" for some days yet, at least, as the Midwestern supply is limited, and growers and salesmen are inclined to proceed slowly.

2 Youths Are Missing After 3 Canoes Upset

Niagara Falls, N. Y., June 28 (AP).—Two youths were missing tonight after three canoes tipped over in the upper Niagara River within an hour tonight. They are Louis Keugel and George Harvey, both 18, of this city.

Patrolman Feore Costanzo, of the La Salle station, said reports of the accident were vague and that he was seeking Levy Rankin, 18, who swam to safety on Grand Island in mid-river, for questioning.

Two canoes capsized in the river about 3 miles above the falls and the five occupants were rescued by passing boats.

Bandit, Dying, Reveals Names Of Accomplices

Thug Wounded in Futile Attempt to Rob Bay State Bank Car.

By the United Press.

Lawrence, Mass., June 28.—John J. ("Connecticut Johnny") Coughlin, alias McNamara, 32, of Cambridge, one of two bandits shot Thursday in a futile attempt to rob an armored bank car of $19,000 cash, died at a hospital today of a bullet wound in the left lung after muttering the first names of his accomplices.

The other, Frank Tartaglia, 32, of Medford, died yesterday.

In delirious ravings before he died, McNamara went over the entire plan of the unsuccessful holdup, shouting orders, giving directions and revealing that four others besides himself and Tartaglia were implicated in the crime. Police were at the bedside when McNamara "talked" after slipping into a coma.

Named in Other Crimes.

Authorities said McNamara already had been identified by witnesses of two previous holdups in the past year. Tartaglia, said by the police to have been identified as a participant in a $16,000 Chelsea City Hall pay roll robbery in March, died of a bullet wound in the neck.

The pair were shot down in a gun battle with Abbot Corkum, messenger and chauffeur for the Bay State Merchant's National Bank, and Police Inspector Timothy J. O'Brien outside the American Railway Express Co.'s office near Lawrence railroad station. Corkum was wounded in the knee.

Bandit Car Recovered.

Shortly before McNamara died, police receovered the automobile used by the bandits. They said the car was stolen from Miss Etta French, of Lowell, June 8.

Meanwhile, Robert Holmes, 23, of Boston, held in connection with the thwarted holdup, was held at police headquarters. He was arrested in Boston yesterday on charges of attempted murder, attempted robbery and carrying a gun without a permit.

Eastern Massachusetts police sought three confederates named by McNamara. They believed capture of the men would solve a series of recent Massachusetts and Rhode Island holdups.

Revenue of U.S. Near Estimate, ExpenseHigher

Budget Figures Exceeded by Nearly 2 Billions; Deficit Mounts.

By the United Press.

The United States Treasury will end its fiscal year tomorrow fairly close to estimates on revenue, but billions off on projected expenditures and the public debt, due to passage of the soldier bonus and invalidation of AAA processing taxes.

A companion of the Treasury's financial condition as of today with budget estimates submitted to Congress by President Roosevelt last January revealed that:

Revenue was overestimated $344,212,993.

Expenditures were underestimated $1,647,108,549.

The public debt total was underestimated $3,176,454,866.

Last January, the President, using figures prepared for him by Treasury experts, estimated Government receipts for the fiscal year at $4,410,703,946. The Treasury balance sheet of June 24, with five business days remaining in the fiscal year, gave total receipts for the fiscal year as $4,066,490,953.

Estimate Is Close.

The President estimated income-tax payments during the fiscal year would total $1,434,112,000. At the close of business on June 24 total collections were $1,421,135,499. The President estimated miscellaneous internal revenue collections at $1,873,091,000. On June 24 they were $1,983,179,115. He estimated customs receipts for the fiscal year at $353,191,000. One June 24 they were $381,103,155.

On one item of receipts the estimates were far wrong. This was on processing taxes. The estimate was $529,042,000. The amount collected to date is $67,316,879. The reason for the discrepancy was invalidation of the agricultural adjustment act, under which these taxes were to be collected, by the Supreme Court.

Collections of other msicellaneous taxes, however, approximately balanced the amount of money which Administration leaders anticipated from the processing taxes.

Against this accurate etimating of Government receipts stood a wide discrepancy between estimates of expenditures and the amount actually expended.

Off on Expenditures.

In January, the President estimated total expenditures for the fiscal year would be $7,093,276,338. The deficit for the fiscal year he estimated at $3,234,507,392 and he said the gross public debt on June 30 should be $30,933,375,017.

Actual expenditures to the close of business on June 24 were $8,740,384,887. The deficit on that date was $4,673,893,934, one and third billion dollars greater than Mr. Roosevelt and his experts had anticipated. And the public debt actually stands at $34,109,829,883.

The President estimated that $2,869,068,187 would be spent for recovery and relief. Up to June 24 the Government had spent $3,234,735,704 for this purpose.

Payment of the soldiers' bonus threw the budget figures out of balance approximately $2,000,000,000. To meet this huge expenditure the Treasury was obliged to float a bond and note issue on June 15 totaling $1,100,000,000 and toborrow some $800,000,000 additional money on short-term Treasury bills, thus boosting the national debt by those amounts. In addition the Government issued $1,755,634,367 in adjusted service bonds for the veterans. These bonds do not mature until 1946, but can be converted into cash at any time. Approximately $500,000,000 of these have already been converted into cash.

Chicago Boy Kills First Bull in Arena

Mexico City, June 28 (U.P.).—Merle Coffey, blond Chicago youth, became the first American bullfighter since Sidney Franklin today when he made his debut as a "matador de novillos" at the Vista Alegre Arena under the name of Mario Bennet.

Coffey, in a faded green suit held together by safety pins, greeted his first bull with a cape pass and was promptly knocked down, but he won the admiration of the crowd for his courage.

Finally, he set himself for the kill. Gritting his teeth, he plunged the sword into the bull but his aim was bad. He repeated the performance numerous times and the animal weakened from loss of blood. Coffey eventually killed the bull with the short knife used for the coup de grace.

Still puffing and nervous after his first performance, Coffey told the United Press that he "thumbed" his way into Mexico two weeks ago. He has had no previous experience in bull fighting.

wavering from his retirement announcement.

At the breakfast table this morning were the President and his wife, Mrs. Sarah Delano Roosevelt, the President's mother; the Lehmans, Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's son and daughter-in-law; son John; Mrs. John Boettiger, the Roosevelt's only daughter, and her husband; and Miss Marguerite LeHand, the President's personal secretary.

With several members of the family, the President later attended services at the little St. James Episcopal Church.

He expects to leave here late tomorrow night, arriving in Washington Tuesday morning, where he will give attention to his first itinerary for a nationwide speaking campaign.

He already is slated to speak July 3 in dedication of the Shenandoah National Park in Virginia and on Independence Day at the home of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello, near Charlottesville, Va.

Earl Browder Is Nominated By Communists

20,000 Crowd N. Y. Hall to Cheer Selection of Party's Leader.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 28.—In frenzied acclamation, Earl W. Browder of Kansas today was nominated as the Communist Party's candidate for President of the United States.

Twenty thousand spectators packed in Madison Square Garden joined the party's 710 delegates in creating a bedlam with their lungs and mechanical noisemakers to rival recent demonstrations of the major political parties.

Ticker tape was showered over the convention floor amid shouting and blaring of horns as Robert Minor, Communist candidate for Governor of New York, rose to nominate Browder. Twice Minor started his speech only to have three bands march out in the aisles leading parading delegates.

Facing Chaos.

Declaring the country is faced with "a chaos of dislocation, ruin and suffering greater than ever before," Minor said "the leaders who will replace today the Washingtons and the Lincolns of the past will be found among the ranks of the revolutionists.

"The man I propose for nomination is one whose origins date back to the beginning of this country—he is a true son of America. * * * His ancestors fought in the armies of George Washington, but, unlike some other sons of the American Revolution, he is true to those traditions."

Minor said Browder, the Communist Party's secretary, and the Republican choice of another Kansan, Gov. Landan, for President, represent "two sides of a tremendous struggle of life and death."

"New John Brown."

"The one candidate is called 'the Kansas Coolidge.' The candidate I propose may be called 'the new John Brown from Ossowattamie.'"

"Mother" Ella R. Bloor, 74-year-old Pennsylvania Communist, nominated Ford.

Earlier the convention gave a ten-minute demonstration for William Z. Foster, thrice the party's candidate for President, who withdrew this year because of poor health.

A Soviet government in Washington was predicted by Foster, who urged the convention to "lay the foundation for a great people's front party."

Browder, in accepting the Presidential nomination, declared the chief enemy of peace, freedom and prosperity in this country was "the Republican Party and its reactionary allies—Hearst, the Liberty League, Wall Street."

"Roosevelt and his Administration," he said, "have been retreating before the attacks of reaction, surrendering position after position. Even the Philadelphia platform, with its progressive note and ringing promises, accepts as final the Supreme Court's usurped power to block their realization until three-fourths of the States have ratified a constitutional amendment.

"The self-styled Union Party of Lemke and Coughlin is the product of a Hearst-Liberty League intrigue. Lemke is clearly but a stooge for Landon. His platform is even more dishonest than that of the Republicans, standing for essentially the same policies."

He defined the main issue as "democracy of fascism in America."

EARL W. BROWDER.

Jailed in 1917.

Kansas City, June 28 (AP).—Earl W. Browder, named in New York today as Communist Party candidate for President, first attracted attention in this section when he was arrested in Olathe, Kans., in June, 1917, after expressing opposition to the selective army draft.

Browder, a native of Wichita, Kans., and his brother, William, were sentenced to serve a year in jail by Federal Judge A. S. Van Valkenburgh, for refusal to register for the draft. Later both were indicted for conspiracy to resist operation of the draft law and sentenced to two years in Federal penitentiary.

Released in July, 1919, after serving the jail term and part of the Federal prison sentence, Browder and others first set up an accounting service here, then formed a small Socialistic community near Independence, Mo.

One of 10 children, he came from a family said to have sent members to every war from the Revolutionary to the World War.

During the World War he left the Socialist Party to become a member of the International Workers of the World, and then of the Communist Party.

Later Browder went to Russia and became active in the American and world Communist movement

Report Prepared by Davis on Five Commodities Under Program.

By the Associated Press.

In its annual report, the AAA asserted yesterday that the combined cash income from cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco and hogs had increased 90 per cent from 1932 to 1935.

The report, prepared by Chester C. Davis, who recently retired as AAA administrator to become a member of the Federal Reserve Board, said these five commodities were the first ones for which crop adjustment programs were put into effect in 1933.

The programs were outlawed by the Supreme Court last January. Later Congress substituted a soil conservation-subsidy payment system.

Cash income from the five commodities was reported to have increased from $1,365,000,000 in 1932 to $2,593,000,000 in 1935, while the cash income from all other farm products increased from $3,012,000,000 to $4,307,000,000.

Rises to $6,900,000,000.

The report said the annual cash income from all farm production increased from $4,377,000,000 in 1932 to $6,900,000,000 in 1935. Rental and benefit payments accounted for nearly 25 per cent of the increases. The remainder was attributed to increase in market prices.

"In general," the report said, "the greatest gains in prices were made by products for which production control measures had been in effect. Prices of cotton, wheat, tobacco, corn, hogs, rice and peanuts averaged 49 per cent of the prewar level in 1932, as compared with an average for all other farm products in the same year of 74 per cent of the prewar level.

"Thus the price recovery of farm products for which production control programs were in effect amounted to 120 per cent, as against 46 per cent for prices of those commodities on which there were no production control programs."

66 Per Cent Increase.

Davis said the yearly average price of all groups of farm products increased 66 per cent during the three-year period, moving from 65 to 108 per cent of the prewar level. The low point occurred in March, 1933, when farm prices were only 55 per cent of the prewar level, while in December, 1935, they advanced 110 per cent of the prewar level. The figures did not include rental and benefit payments.

The exchange value per unit of farm products was reported to have increased from 61 per cent of the prewar level in 1932 to 86 per cent in 1935, a gain of about 41 per cent.

Benefit payments derived from processing taxes and made to producers in consideration of crop adjustment contracts constituted during the three years approximately 18.2 per cent of the farm income from the commodities for which such programs were in effect, and approximately 7.3 per cent of the total cash income from all farm production.

Averaged $451,000,000.

Rental and benefit payments contributed about 25 per cent of the amount by which the average farm cash income in 1933-35 exceeded the cash income of 1932. Such payments averaged about $451,000,000 during the three years.

Cash available for living in 1935 after deducting wages, operating expenses, taxes and interest from farm cash income, Davis said, was the largest since 1929 and two and one-half times larger than in 1932.

Cash farm income in 1935 was 58 per cent larger than in 1932. While prices farmers paid for services and commodities they used in production and living increased somewhat, the purchasing power of farm cash income in 1935 still was 35 per cent larger than that of 1932, he added.

Teacher Session To Study Red Issue

Portland, Oreg., June 28 (AP).—Academic freedom and the personal beliefs of school instructors bulked large on the program as teachers from all over the country flocked into Portland today for the seventy-fourth conference of the National Education Association.

The question of teaching the facts of Communism and other controversial political philosophies will come before the resolutions committee Thursday night. Early arrivals predicted "decisive action" would be taken.

The vanguard attended vesper services today, in charge of the national president, Agnes Samuelson, State superintendent of public instruction in Iowa. The principal address was given by Dr. Bruce Baxter, president of Williamette University, Salem, Oreg.

The first general convention session will be held tomorrow, with Dean Henry Lester Smith, University of Indiana, in charge.

Others' Oratory Is Their Living

Franklin Steinko and Mrs. Constance Packard, back from the Democratic National Convention, tell the stenographers' trials at that and other gatherings.

Two D. C. Stenotypists Reveal Noted Speakers' Peculiarities

Billy Sunday and Huey Long Were Hard to Keep Up With, While Roosevelt and Al Smith Are Easy, Young Couple Agree.

Whenever an audience settles back to listen to a speech by President Roosevelt, Al Smith, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace or any other famous speaker, a certain young woman and a certain young man take a good grip on their nerves and get down to some mighty fast work.

The audience may miss a word now and then. It may relax and fail to listen to a sentence or two. But not Constance Packard or Franklin Steinko. They must get every syllable. If the speaker muffles his talk Mrs. Packard and Steinko have to do a little lip-reading.

Theirs is the job of tapping out on a small machine the complete speech, no matter whether it is given at the rate of 300 words a minute or in halting, awkward sentences.

Audiences Troublesome, Too.

It used to be the speakers who gave the stenotypists the jitters but both Mrs. Packard and Steinko learned at the Democratic National convention in Philadelphia that audiences can cause a lot of trouble.

"No matter how clearly the speeches were delivered the noise of the crowd made it difficult for us to hear, even though we were seated on the platform," Mrs. Packard explained when she returned to Washington yesterday. "We had to wear earphones part of the time."

It was her first political convention and, without a moments' hesitation, she declared it was the most thrilling as well as the toughest assignment she's ever had. In the past she has covered sports events, surgical clinics, every kind of convention except a political one, interviews and even family reunions.

Take Down Funerals.

Sometimes she and Steinko have been hired to take down funeral services, and once Mrs. Packard was employed to stenotype the messages received at a spiritualists' seance. Aside from the just-closed Democratic convention, the hardest job she ever had was the Dempsey-Tunney fight.

"They told me afterward," she said, "that there was only 45 minutes of actual boxing but it seemed longer to me than the time I worked 24 hours straight at the National Geographic on the Anderson-Stevens stratosphere flight."

Enjoys Medicos Most.

Mrs. Packard says the job she enjoys most is the convention of the American Medical Association. She has reported it since 1924, with the exception of one year when she took time out to have a baby, and can spell fancy medical terms as easily as most stenographers write, "Yours of 23rd inst. received."

She and Steinko had barely got back to their homes in Washington from the Democratic convention before they started out again on other assignments. Mrs. Packard left last night for Cleveland to report the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' convention. Steinko leaves today for San Antonio, Tex., where he will cover a meeting of the Women's Overseas Service League.

Life has become less difficult for the stenotypists since the deaths of Billy Sunday and Huey Long. Both were extremely fast talkers. The evangelist could pour out a torrent of speech which came close to measuring 300 words a minute. Senator Long was not far behind him.

Floyd Gibbons Hardest.

The hardest subject they've ever tackled who is still living is Floyd Gibbons, Mrs. Pickard and Steinko agreed. They both said he shoots words out of his mouth like bullets out of a machine gun.

"I understand he's slowed down a little," said Mrs. Packard. "I hope he has if I ever have to take another of his speeches."

Some of the easy speakers so far as the stenotypists are concerned are President Roosevelt, King Edward VIII, Secretary of State Hull, Jouette Shouse, Lady Astor and Al Smith. They all maintain a fairly even tempo, enunciate clearly and use enough inflections to hold the interest of the listener.

Mrs. Roosevelt is more difficult than the President because she speaks slowly and frequently pauses; then just as the stenotypers are beginning to relax she starts again and they have to hurry to catch up. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace is rather difficult, too. His sentences are likely to go on and on and on.

But no matter what the style of the speaker, Mrs. Packard and Steinko feed all his words into a little machine, which then types them out on a ribbon of white paper.

Mormons Respond To Jobless Plan

New York, June 28 (AP).—A plan of the Mormon Church to supply necessities of life to all unemployed among its three-quarter million members is meeting with a ready response from the membership, Presiding Bishop Sylvester Q. Cannon said tonight.

"Right now we are concentrating in collecting supplies, food and cash so that every able-bodied male member may have not only the necessities of life, but work as well," he said.

He was unable to say if all members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints would be taken off of Federal work relief projects.

"Right now we have no unemployment in our membership in many localities, notably Idaho and California," Bishop Cannon explained. "Most of the unemployment is in the centers of heavy population.

"Our idea is to help the people to help themselves. We are encouraging church building and other similiar projects."

Blaze Razes Barn; 4-Hour Fight Fails

Fire of undetermined origin yesterday morning destroyed a large dairy barn on the Ray farm on the East-West highway, near Silver Spring.

A thoroughbred bull, valued at $150, quartered on the first floor of the barn, where the fire started, lost its life, but several calves were rescued. Thirty cows had just been milked and turned into the field by the owners, Frank and Robert Ray, a short time before the blaze was discovered.

Firemen from Silver Spring, Chevy Chase and Kensington volunteer departments, battled the blaze for almost four hours. Fanned by a lively breeze, the fire for a time threatened the dwelling on the estate, but firemen kept it confined to the stable. Damage was estimated at $4,000.

Rev. N. Z. Town, Of Adventists, Dead on Coast

The Rev. Nelson Zane Town, 73, former secretary of the publishing department of the Seventh Day Adventist General Conference in Takoma Park, Md., died Saturday in White Memorial Hospital, Los Angeles.

Mr. Town left his post here three months ago because of ill health. He had gone to California to convalesce.

Born in March, 1863, in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., Mr. Town attended the missionary college at South Lancaster, Mass., in 1889. He was married shortly afterward to Miss Sadie Graham, who survives, and the couple left for Scotland as religious workers.

Mr. Town was transferred later to England, then was sent to South America, where he spent 12 years as a missionary in the Argentine.

Returning to the United States in 1909, he became secretary of the publishing department of the general conference in Takoma Park. He held that position until five years ago, when he was sent back to Argentina to become president of the Austral Union. After two and a half years at that post he once more was made publishing secretary at Takoma Park.

The body will be returned to Takoma Park for funeral services, and burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery. Surviving, besides Mrs. Town, is a daughter, Mrs. Genevieve Chase, of Los Angeles.

The Town's home is at 100 Lincoln avenue, Takoma Park.

Wilkins' Silence Worries His Wife

New York, June 28 (AP).—Lady Wilkins, former actress, was reported by her manager as "unduly worried" tonight as the twelfth day passed without word from her explorer-husband, Sir Hubert Wilkins, or his boat, the Antarctic exploration vessel Wyatt Earp.

"Lady Wilkins is terribly upset and spent a restless night last night," Charles Freeman, her manager, said. Sir Hubert had planned to communicate daily with his wife.

The Coast Guard wirelessed all ships to be on the lookout for the vessel on which Sir Hubert and a crew of ten, including a wireless operator, left New York June 17 for Norway, where the Wyatt Earp was to be delivered.

All efforts by the Navy and Coast Guard radios to communicate directly with the ship have proved unavailing.

Previously Lady Wilkins had said Sir Hubert experienced trouble with the ship during the Ellsworth Antarctic expedition.

Revolt In The Desert.

Since April the British authorities have been faced by a situation of steadily increasing gravity in Palestine. More than 125 persons have been killed as a result of the guerrilla war waged by Arab Nationalists against the mandatory power and the Jews.

But up to now the British have found some consolation in the fact that the Palestinian disorders have not spread. In the neighboring mandate of Transjordania all has been serene. Only a week or so ago William Ormsby-Gore, the new colonial minister, paid tribute to the ruler, Emir Abdullah, for his "steadying influence."

It now begins to appear, however, that this was but the calm before the storm. From Ammah, capital of Transjordania, comes the report of a meeting of desert sheiks at which the demand was made that Abdullah raise the banner of revolt against Great Britain unless that nation agrees to reverse its policies in Palestine. This would mean giving way to the demands of the Arab Nationalists that the sale of land to the Jews be prohibited and all further Jewish immigration into the Holy Land be barred.

Such action would, on Britain's part, obviously go contrary to the intent expressed in the Balfour declaration of 1917 and to the terms of the League mandate. Therefore the British government has refused to give way to the Arab demands. But should the flames of rebellion now cross the Jordan the British position would become exceedinly difficult, for there is no telling how far the conflagration might spread. Arab Nationalism is on the march throughout the Near East.

The victory won by the Wafd (the Egyptian Nationalist Party) in Egypt; the fact that France has been forced to give way to Syrian demands for autonomy; and now Great Britain's humiliating surrender to Italy are events whose implications have not been lost on the Arabs. All this makes the outlook for the British depressing.

It is equally depressing for Emir Abdullah. He is not unaware of the growing strength of Arab Nationalism in his own and neighboring lands. Some time ago, it was reported by the London Telegraph, he urged the British to persuade France to permit a union between Syria and Transjordania. If this were not permitted, he declared, Transjordania would be forced to follow in the steps of the Arab Nationalists in Egypt and Syria. The fact that the economic situation in his land, never very good, has become worse through crop failures has made him aware of the necessity of placating nationalist feeling.

But, at the same time, he knows only too well that he owes his throne to the British. In Transjordania they found a haven for his father, the late King Hussein, when the latter was kicked out of the Hedjaz. He is also the recipient of an annual subsidy from the British exchequer. Unquestionably he wants to keep Britain's friendship. But how to do so and at the same time keep his rebellious sheiks in line may prove to be a task beyond his abilities. Once again, as in Col. Lawrence's day, the desert is in flames.

A Landon Dilemma.

When he telegraphed his interpretation of the Republican platform to the Cleveland convention, Alfred M. Landon convinced the world of his political courage. But when he admits to beguiling his vacation-leisure with contemporary detective novels, he is approaching literary rashness.

It is all very well to like such books; everybody likes them, and ordinary people may confess to the general taste—and stop there. For a Presidential candidate to admit the soft impeachment is, however, quite another "story." He is a public figure, and the vast party of detective-fiction lovers is torn by bitter factional strife. Once started, he will not be permitted to retreat; he must declare unequivocally which sort of detective-fiction he prefers.

Does Gov. Landon like Sir Harold's corpse to be found in the first chapter—or does he like to have the assassination deferred until Chapter IV? Does he believe that the author should play fair with the reader, or that a Hindu fakir may legitimately be introduced as the guilty man in the concluding pages—and out of the deceased Colonel's theretofore unrevealed early life? Is the scientific amateur a more engaging novel-sleuth than the Scotland Yard professional? Who is better: Bailey or A. E. W. Mason? Who is worse: Van Dyne or Edgar Wallace? Should the British methods of Freeman Wills Crofts be ranked below the American technique of Mary Roberts Rhinehart?

These are only a few of the embarrassing questions that Gov. Landon will be compelled to answer. And preference for any one school of detective-fiction will be all too likely to call down upon his daring head the disapproval of all the other factions.

The Acceptance Speech.

In his very moving and eloquent speech accepting renomination for the Presidency, Franklin D. Roosevelt used one phrase on the interpretation of which his friends and his foes will be in complete accord. "Philadelphia," he said, "is a good city in which to write American history." In this was the clear implication that the President considered himself to be writing American history on Saturday night. And he was doing so.

President Roosevelt was writing American history not merely because of his ringing promise to wage war on the concentration of power in the hands of those whom he called "economic royalists." Other Presidential candidates, notably William Jennings Bryan, have shown him the way in this respect.

Mr. Roosevelt more clearly wrote new pages into our history by his promise to concentrate power in the Federal Government to the degree which he feels desirable to end what he broadly terms "economic tyranny." The record of New Deal policy, earlier speeches at the Philadelphia convention, and the platform of the new Democratic Party, have all clearly indicated that the President seeks to match the State against the existing capitalist system in a struggle certain to have the most profound and far-reaching consequences. But on Saturday night a formal declaration of war replaced what has heretofore been only guerrilla fighting. There will be no more breathing spell for business if Mr. Roosevelt is re-elected.

And there was yet another respect, perhaps the most important of all, in which the President made history at Philadelphia. This was implicit in his exalted and mystical attitude. Great men have sought the position of Chief Executive of the United States. On occasion they have clothed their thoughts, their ideals, their ambitions, in phrases which still ring down the avenues of time. But never before has a candidate for this office proclaimed himself a Man of Destiny, as Mr. Roosevelt did in so many words on Saturday night.

The American people did not have to be assembled in football stadiums throughout the country in order to be acutely conscious of the fact that all is not for the best in the best of all possible worlds. Many of them already know, as well as the President himself, that certain profound dislocations must be adjusted, that certain trends must be controlled, that certain new attitudes must be accepted in order that this Nation, in Lincoln's deathless phrase, "shall have a new birth of freedom." The dynasties of the "economic royalists," against which the President now trains his lance, will find few supporters among the masses of this country provided that their chosen leader can show that he knows how to replace that which he seeks to destroy.

It is not the overthrow of unfair privilege which is the issue in the November election. It is rather the character of the government which shall be given responsibility to carry out the changes which are due.

Whether they be viewed as long or short, Mr. Roosevelt has now had well over three years in which to demonstrate both the character and the caliber of the government which he can give the American people. His contribution to the restoration of national morale will never be effectively questioned. By and large he was justified in saying at Philadelphia that "we have conquered fear." But unfortunately that conquest is not necessarily permanent. Indeed, assurance of its validity is today largely confined to the unthinking. It is not found among those who realize how easily a nation may be plunged into irretrievable disaster by continuously refusing to observe those inescapable conditions of stability toward which the New Deal takes so cavalier an attitude.

And in the development of a technique of government capable of fulfilling his generous aspirations, the Administration of President Roosevelt stands condemned as one of appalling incompetence.

Although it has devalued the currency and squandered billions of the national substance, it has succeeded in drawing only a diaphanous veil across the problem of unemployment. Although it has dabbled by fits and starts in such fields as housing, banking reorganization, agricultural rehabilitation, industrial codification and social security, its efforts, entirely regardless of Supreme Court decisions, have at best attained very modest success. Although it has set its face toward an ever-increasing degree of State Socialism it has so far failed utterly to provide the essential prerequisite of a professionalized, non-political civil service.

With a record which is pitifully weak, under the acid test of the relation of achievement to expenditure, the President at Philadelphia took the politically sagacious course. That his speech from every emotional criterion was excellent, that it envisaged in very distorted focus some of the basic problems of the Nation today, is far from saying that it was a truly satisfactory speech. Unable to defend the record in the field already attempted, Mr. Roosevelt substituted a fervid promise to wander with high knight errantry over an ever-wider terrain. So Don Quixote talked to Sancho Panza when the first bout with a windmill had proved none too successful.

Except in terms of generalities there was no hitting below the belt in the acceptance speech. The President showed perfect taste in keeping his remarks throughout on a tone of lofty and very appealing morality. But there was in that speech, for those who listened carefully, something far more disturbing than would have been the normal rough-and-tumble of an old-style political harangue.

It was a speech which opened all the emotional outlets, which unloosed mob psychology and then stimulated it with a master hand. It was the speech of a popular leader who does not know where he is leading. President Roosevelt's ringing assurance to the contrary notwithstanding, it was the sort of speech which paves the way for fascism.

The Function Of Research.

In a recent address at the Brookings Institution, Dr. Robert T. Crane discussed present-day trends in research, devoting particular attention to the difficulties presented by applied research in the social sciences. By applied research the speaker meant research directly related to questions of action or policy as distinguished from a more fundamental type of investigation which may have only an indirect or remote connection with social problems of immediate concern.

In the field of applied research, the temptation is undoubtedly great to shape investigations with a view to validating the preconceived ideas of those directing the work. The trained economist, for instance, is consciously or unconsciously influenced by his personal prejudices, and his theoretical bias in assembling material for analysis and interpreting it. He is also handicapped in his work, as Dr. Crane points out, by a lack of that vast body of generalized knowledge available to workers in the applied physical sciences.

Indeed, as the field of investigation open to the student of the social sciences has expanded, and become more highly specialized, it often seems as if the ability to classify and generalize the acquired information had declined. Hence, it is not an exaggeration to say that "it is but little more than an attitude of mind, combined of objectivity and systematic perseverance, that distinguishes the social scientist from the layman in his approach to applied sciences."

This acute and eminently true observation incidentally throws a good deal of light upon the obscure causes of the animosity of the public toward so-called "brain trusters" who place the results of their mental labors at the disposal of governmental agencies. It also helps to account for the suspicion with which even the most independent, nonpartisan research agencies are often regarded. People instinctively question the ability of the investigator to render a really objective judgment upon controversial social and economic issues.

Even assuming a high degree of impartiality on the part of research agencies or individual investigators, specific recommendations based upon "scientific" conclusions are simply personal judgments. And most people would agree with Dr. Crane's opinion that on questions of social policy the scientist is probably quite as prejudiced as other people. In fact, he is not always so well equipped as the intelligent layman to outline a practical program of action because of his intense concentration upon a few selected problems.

Everyone has had experience with the individual who thinks that all mundane evils are the result of some single maladjustment, and that there is one sovereign remedy for them all. In a modified form that attitude of mind is frequently found to be characteristic of the highly specialized "research" man or scientist. If interested in labor problems, he seeks one type of solution for current ills. If he is a student of monetary theory, he may urge some monetary experiment for restoring prosperity.

Moreover, the specialist, however extensive his knowledge in his own particular field, is seldom qualified to weigh the importance of those other values that lie outside the range of his interests. The research agencies can supply the facts, and weigh their significance to some extent, but they can never supply the composite judgments that in democratic countries ought to control social and economic policies. Scientific research and its applications, in short, should be at the service of the people, to enlighten them but not to decide for them what they should do when faced by a choice of policies.

Traffic Law Changes.

Malcolm Campbell in the North American Review.

If the steady and speedy flow of road transport is to be maintained, we shall have to recast a great many of our ideas of control . . . many legislative changes will be called for. Traffic law has grown up by stages. As new conditions arose, new enactments were grafted onto the old stock. But we have now come to the point where conditions can no longer be met by fresh grafting. It can best be met by assembling an international traffic convention for the express purpose of examining traffic law as a whole, with a view to drawing up a code which, modified to suit the differing conditions of the various countries, would serve as a basis for the traffic laws of the world.

I believe I am right in saying that Americans find the differing laws and regulations of the several States often conflicting and difficult for the traveler to understand, and therefore to comply with. I have heard, during my visits to the United States, the opinion expressed that there should be a single Federal code, known and understood by all.

Natural Aristocracy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As Thomas Jefferson predicted in one of his latter-day letters to John Adams, it appears that our country has recently fallen into the hands of a false aristocracy.

Let me quote him verbatim:

"There is a natural aristocracy among men, the grounds of this are virtue and talent. There is also an artificial aristocracy founded on birth and wealth without either virtue or talent."

What I think he meant is, that natural aristocracy is a mental characteristic developed through application to study, broadness of conception, and humanitarian principles, and can arise from the lowest ranks. Ancestry, heredity nor environment does not necessarily have any bearing on the subject.

What chance is there for one to arise out of our organized political units when their basic principle is to protect and foster a weak personnel?

'Looking To The Future.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many subscribe to the idea that the New Deal was inevitable, as the Old Deal failed to reach desirable objectives. But for long-winded orators to dwell at great length on the mistakes of their adversaries will not impress the people who are looking to the future for deliverance.

After all, what is gained by digging up ancient policies, long since consigned to oblivion, and parading them before the minds of a disturbed people? One could point to the fact that our entrance into the World War, under Democratic rule, was one of the most colossal blunders in history, in the opinion of the majority of our people, but what good would it do? Although a Democrat, I cannot lose sight of the fact that this country functioned with far greater efficiency under Republican rule than any nations of the Old World, under bureaucracy.

It is, moreover, perfectly patent to hosts of Jeffersonian Democrats that the present party has veered sharply away from long established principles. Many apparently approve of a Democratic dictator in the White House and centralization of power in Washington. On the other hand, many do not.

On The Head?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Dr. Edwin G. Conklin, of Princeton University, in an address before a convention of scientists at Ithaca, N. Y., certainly hit the economic nail squarely on the head when he declared that "Democratic socialism seems to me the safest and sanest social order. It avoids the extremes of communism, fascism and individualism, and yet contains the elements of all these.

What a contrast is the foregoing to the usual vague and evasive analyses of those who try to conceal the real truth from the people by the doctrines of confusion.

Such impossible plans as those of Dr. Townsend, Huey Long and Father Coughlin, even if practical, deal only with effects and not with the causes of world chaos. Socialist democracies established everywhere, will increase general freedom, banish commercial wars, race prejudices and hatreds and make Christian ethics possible of fulfillment. There is no other solution, look where we may. We need more Dr. Conklins who will speak fearlessly and frankly.

'The Jerks.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Hon. James Aloysius Farley has missed a cue. There are abroad grave doubts whether that high-powered political evangelist is thoroughly familiar with American political history, but there can be no doubt whatever that he does know the history of American evangelism.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century occurred what is known as the "Great Revival," when religious fervor rose to such a pitch that vast numbers of people were affected with what was called "the jerks" (not to mention sundry other emotional manifestations). Accordingly it became the practice, in preparing for a "protracted meeting," to select for the place of the meeting a grove of young saplings and to cut off these saplings breast high "for the people to jerk by."

Had Evangelist Farley known of this extraordinary aid to emotional exercises, surely he would have chosen for the meeting of the New Deal jamboree some charming grove, where an abundance of sapling stumps could have been provided for the devotees of the New Deal to jerk by.

Georgetown Plans.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Just a few lines to say that I read an article in a Georgetown paper about the traffic on M street. Some of the business men want to support the Hazen plan, cutting Prospect avenue through to relieve congestion on this street. Now that the new Rock Creek Parkway is open, I don't think the District Commissioners should waste the taxpayers' money cutting this street through.

A short time ago the Commissioners approved the plans of People's Counsel William Roberts, which I believe are the best ones. One is to build a road over the old canal and the other is to build a highway viaduct along K street. It's the heavy traffic that goes to and from Maryland and Virginia that causes congestion on this street. The Hazen plan would not take care of the Maryland and Virginia traffic. It would only go through Prospect avenue, whereas the plan of Mr. Roberts would take care of it all. It will also keep the heavy traffic below M street.

The District Commissioners know the cost of these new roads and they should respect the taxpayers by using their money the best way and not throw it away for something which will not do any good.

The Democratic Platform.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When a so-called Democratic Party decides to "scrap" States' rights and establish a centralized Government in Washington, with a dictator presiding, it is high time that loyal disciples of Jefferson withdraw from such a traitorous body.

What is our country coming to when Democrats have to seek Republican aid, in order to uphold States' rights and individual liberty?

If in the near future we hear a commotion in Southern cemeteries it will be Lee, Jackson, Jefferson and others turning over in their graves.

The State of The Nation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Referring to J. D. Mason's recent letter to The Post on principles advocated by the "founding fathers."

Washington and Jefferson were radical when the occasion arose to justify it. I believe that Washington once indignantly observed that every State should hang its richest man as an example to the greedy and grasping who don't know when they have enough wealth, while Jefferson wrote that a revolution every 20 years was required to "water the tree of democracy." Certainly no Socialist and but few Communists would take that radical a stand!

It is impossible for "any man" to obtain honestly from 4 to 44 times more of the "good things of life" here than he could get in any other land. A very few here may get more luxuries than in any other country in the world, barring Britain and France, but that is accomplished only by exploitation of the many by these few. The total annual income is distributed far more fairly and equitably in Scandinavian nations than it is here, hence they do not have the shocking extremes of abundant wealth on the one hand and the miserable poverty that exists as a result on the other hand.

We have had no widespread "collectivism" under this Administration. If we had had, Socialists and Communists would have backed the Democratic Party this year. Democratic State organizations are more reactionary than radical in nature. Note the late news from Florida Arkansas, Alabama, Texas and Arizona, where fascistic ideals are raising their snakish heads!

We have had capitalistic collectivism for many years whereby the surplus wealth created by the toil of workers and farmers in office, field and factory, is "collected" by the autocracy of wealth through regimentation and expended by the few, or hoarded, as their individual caprices may dictate. Bankers associations and chambers of commerce are collectivistic organizations, and are strongly regimented.

The relatively mild and partial collectivism in the form of TVA and PWA is far less objectionable than capitalistic collectivism and the former benefits far more people than the latter.

We really have a government of men running our economic system, not a government of laws. These men include the Morgans, Mellons, Rockefellers, Dohertys, Fords, Hearsts, Macfaddens and the Insulls. These men have a monopoly on exorbitant salaried jobs and dictate the means of life by which millions must exist. There is no limit as to the number of jobs and incomes they may receive; how different it is with the rest of us; we are regimented!

The Democratic Party is not dominated by Socialists and Communists, as Mr. Mason alleges in his generalities. Were not the reactionaries evident by their attendance at Philadelphia? Did they not cooperate in deciding the platform, just as they did at Cleveland? The radicals have their own political parties despite the fact that the old party State machines combine in enacting repressive State laws in attempts to rule radical parties off the ballot. The "two-party" system is a form of monopoly, and repudiates in effect real democracy. However, Mr. Mason forgets that there is a large element of radical Republicans and even if the G. O. P. should win the "left-wingers" will be found in the halls of Congress in just as great numbers. So it looks as though the reactionaries will lose either way the election goes, or if it goes neither way!

A. S. E. ELY.

Washington, June 27.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to say I quite agree with J. D. Mason about what has happened to the good old Democratic Party. It certainly is a thing of the past for the present. Certainly, the sentimentalists, Socialists and pinks have it, and I for another intend to take a walk right over and vote the Republican ticket straight.

I think your editorial of June 24 on the New Deal philosophy accurately characterizes it when you refer to its primary objective being the substitution of a personal government for our existing Government of written laws. And no better example of the attempt to substitute persons for laws can be found than the unsuccessful effort of Secretary Perkins and Commissioner MacCormack to repeal most existing immigration restrictions and alien deportation statutes by substituting therefor their will to admit aliens, to change the status of aliens illegally here and to deport or not deport most aliens as they "find in the public interest."

They were even unwilling to await Congressional authority for so doing and during the last "three long years," without any express authority of law, they have "stayed" the deportations of the very worst types of alien lawbreakers and criminals in spite of the mandatory direction of the laws they took a solemn oath to uphold and execute.

The Post Impressionist

The Oldest Cathedral.

Post Office, Monday.

DIDN'T you follow our columns on Peaceful Places—places that Time has forgotten? Well, the loss is yours—and, anyhow, you'll know, from your own experience, how the most pacific town will go to war in defense of any claims it makes to antiquity.

Say that the sidewalks of Dover, Del., were paved before those of Savannah, Ga. — and you have Savannah, Ga., on your back. Say that Savannah's first city prison was the first stone city prison in the Original Thirteen States—and Lancaster, Pa., will be strangling you.

You know this. So you will scent the deep design of a letter from Mr. Marshall G. Loring.

"During your recent and delightful talks about old towns in the United States," he writes us, "you have had much to say concerning their churches.

"Why have you not told us which is the oldest church building in America?"

Well, we are not so unwary as to be caught by such chaff. Perhaps the reason we didn't, heretofore, name the oldest church-building in America was that we were talking of the United States. But, if Mr. Loring really wants to know what is, if not the oldest church-building, at least the oldest cathedral in America, we'll tell him:

It is the Cathedral of Trujillo City, in the Dominican Republic.

We know there is some dispute about its date. Nevertheless, we are prepared to support our contention.

The Cathedral of Trujillo isn't so magnificent as either the Cathedral of Lima or that of the City of Mexico. Though the largest cathedral in the West Indies, the Cathedral of Trujillo isn't large—as Western cathedrals go. However, there's no denying its beauty, and there's no reasonable denying its age. It wasn't begun, as some antiquarians have contended, 22 years after Columbus "sailed on"—see the poem by Joaquin Miller—nor yet in 1512, as the Encyclopedia Britannica would have you believe. But it was begun in 1523.

Moreover, it had a predecessor at the same site. When the city was moved to the west bank of the Ozama, the Conquistadores set aside a place there for the diocesan church: a large block facing the central square, the Plaza Mayor.

In his Reliquas Historicas de La Espanola, Bernardo Pichardo says the family of the Garays gave the land. It was, at all events, in front of the citadel. Fray Garcia de Padilla authorized the work in May, 1512, and a thatch-roof timber church was constructed.

Of course this was only a temporary building. The second Bishop of Santo Domingo, Alejandro Geraldini, was soon calling the attention of Charles V to the fact that it was unworthy.

"Because," he wrote, "the episcopal church of my see is made of timbers, of thatch, boards and clay—everything entwined according to the art of the gardener—sacrilegious people often, by night, desecrate the Sacred Books, the altar-ornaments; nor is it secure against witches, necromancers, astrologers and fanatics."

This had its effect, especially as a similar word went to the great Cardinal Egidio. Charles appears to have appointed commissioners to study the conditions of the cathedral—perhaps of the diocese in general. Anyhow, in 1522, Alvaro de Castro and Lucas Vazquez de Ayllon, the latter "Hearer of the Royal Tribunal of Santo Domingo," reported that, because of the thatch roof:

"As soon as it rains, holy services cannot be held nor it there any (other) town in the see where a church has been built or started."

The error as to the date of the succeeding stone building is based upon an inscription on an ancient cross in one of the chapels:

"This is the first symbol placed in the center of this field, in order to start the construction of this magnificent temple, 1514."

But at least one learned scholar, the Franciscan Cipriano de Utrera, has attacked the authenticity of that inscription, while later antiquarians suggest that the cross was set up in the lot merely to announce what was, sometime, to follow. The Conquistadores had a way of doing this when, for instance, they founded a new town.

Just the same, 1523 is good enough for our purpose. The lovely Spanish Renaissance Cathedral that you can see down there today—only 1535 nautical miles from the Port of New York—is, Mr. Loring, the oldest cathedral in America.

We have dispensed justice to Santo Domingo, yet preserved peace in the United States. We'll call it a day.

Britain Chooses

'Empire And Guns' Made Unspoken Slogan Of England As She Turns Away From Italy To Consider Germany And Japan.

By David Wills.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

THERE IS a great deal of intrigue to get rid of Anthony Eden. Anti-League men are saying that since Hoare had to resign when his Paris plan was rejected, Eden should resign in his turn now that his League policy has been equally rejected. One of the results of the new empire-and-guns policy of the government may well be the eclipse of Eden as a powerful political force.

To the right-wing Conservatives he is anathema because he once led the demand for sanctions; to the pro-League Liberals and Laborites he will be equally discredited if he allows himself to remain in a government whose policies will be exactly opposite to those which he professed. He will be judged merely as a politician, and as a politician he won't make the grade.

One of his personal victories behind the scenes will have to be chalked up to Sir Robert Vansittart, permanent head of the Foreign Office civil service, who helped to engineer the Hoare-Laval plan, and who opposes the League. It is believed that from him came the obviously officially inspired story which appeared in the Daily Telegraph following that paper's interview with Mussolini in the interests of Anglo-Italian co-operation. The Telegraph story said Italy would be welcomed back to Europe's good graces through the Mediterranean pact which may be hatched at the Montreux conference to consider Turkey's claim to rearm the Dardanelles. With Italy back, the Stresa anti-German front restored, sanctions dead, Europe can get down to the next business before it: German rearmament and potential aggression.

For that is the clew to the government's willingness to forgive and forget the Italian war. It has become convinced that the danger to the empire comes much more immediately from Germany and Japan, and in order to strengthen its strategic position is willing to take Mussolini's word for it that the Abyssinian conquest was merely a colonial skirmish, without the slightest suggestion of threat against the empire.

Return Of Hoare Influences New Policy.

THE RETURN of Sir Samuel Hoare to the government in charge of the navy must have had some influence in consolidating the new policy toward Europe. But it is likely to have even more effect upon Britain's Far Eastern policy. Hoare is said to be convinced that before long Britain will be faced with a direct threat from Japan against Hong Kong, and is determined that Britain shall not give way. In the circumstances the recent official blessing given to a Chinese railway loan, at a time when foreign loans are practically, if not legally, prohibited without government approval, can only have political and strategic importance, since few people would bless such a loan on its economic and financial merits.

It is anticipated in London that the Far Eastern position may develop along these lines: The incipient civil war between the Nanking and the Canton forces is being fomented by Japan; if it gets under way the Japanese may then move into Peking at once, and march southward, since Japan, in British opinion, has given up the possibility of expansion northward at the expense of Russia. The southward movement of the Japanese troops may cause Chiang Kai-chek to retreat into the southwestern provinces where he has established his inland base.

All his supplies, and those of the Canton forces whether they are then still fighting Chiang or have allied with him against the Japanese, will have to enter China through Canton and Hong Kong. The Japanese will then turn to the British, demand that the supplies be cut off under penalty of blockade; it will politely be suggested that a refusal will be considered an unfriendly act, and Britain will have to choose between defending her interests or quietly surrendering them as a total loss.

It is said that present government policy is to defend, and not to surrender, a course which would be impossible if a hostile Italy were straddling British communications in the Mediterranean, and accordingly peace must be made with Italy, even at the cost of blackmail. And it is naval policy to develop a second line of empire defense, with a naval base at Simonstown in the Union of South Africa, and possibly at Colombo, in order to provide support for Singapore, which as the nearest fortified port becomes the front-line base.

THE PREFERENCE being shown by the British government for the known dangers of war against Germany and Japan in defense of imperial interests, in place of the unknown dangers of a League war in defense of a principle of international morality will not make the government's foreign negotiations much easier. Even if we accept Italy's rejection of aggressive intentions against Britain, and there is little enough reason why we should, Italy is not likely to come into an anti-German pact without commitments from Britain covering German aggression in central and southeastern Europe, the region which directly affects Italy. And after her experience in the last war of allying herself with the highest bidder, and then finding herself without the promised trophies, Italy will undoubtedly demand cash on the spot.

Britain is not likely to get away with her obvious desire to have no undertakings except in Western Europe, with the dirty work in the rest of Europe left to her allies. And although our Conservative government is even thinking of alliance with Russia, the natural enemy of both Germany and Japan, Russia will naturally want as much protection from Britain in the east as we want from her in the west.

The unknown element in this return to power politics by Britain is the reaction of the public. The Liberal and Labor press can be expected to put up a long opposition, but what will that imaginary creature, the man in the street, think about it?

In general he is vaguely pro-League, not anti-German in spite of his disgust with Nazi oppression, definitely antiwar. If he had a clear grasp of the issues before the country the odds are that he would be against the government policy. But the most striking thing to the foreign observer seems to be the indifference of the man in the street to the political arguments which keep politicians and newspaper magnates awake at night. Whether it is due to ignorance, or isolation, to the numbness that comes from repeated shocks or to fatalism, the British act as if they were but little concerned in Europe's catastrophes.

Outlook Favorable For New Policies.

SINCE THE new foreign policy of the government will be presented to the country as a means not of assuming responsibilities for other peoples' actions, but of keeping out of trouble, it is quite possible that it can be put over without more than rumblings of opposition. The power of the opposition lies undeveloped in the still rather nebulous dissatisfaction of the working man with the political methods which landed us in the last war, and promise to repeat the same result in the near future.

It will be the determined effort of the opposition political parties and press to work up that dissatisfaction, and defeat the present government. England can look forward to an increasingly bitter press campaign, to more and more vehement exhortations to enlist in the army from War Minister Pacifist-hating Duff Cooper, to isolate from Press Lord Beaverbrook, to revive the League from Liberals and Labor, to make friends with Little Brother Hitler from trembling Lord Rothmere, to rearm from everybody. And certainly we shall rearm.

G.O.P. Labor Plank Assailed by Berry

By the Associated Press.

President George L. Berry of Labor's Non-Partisan League said in a statement today that the Republican platform declaration for collective bargaining without interference "from any source" was another "subterfuge" to block union organization.

He argued that under this language contacts of union officials from outside a plant to help organize its workers would be interpreted as "interference."

"It is only another one in a long list of subterfuges," he said, "by which employers have tried to defeat any move by their workers to band together and, through collective power, demand decent working conditions, reasonable working hours, and a diversion of at least some small portion of industry's profits to the worker's pay envelope."

Political Plan Pledged Clubs By Townsend

Not Adopting Platforms of Any Other Party, He Declares.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 28.—Dr. Francis E. Townsend, whose $200-a-month pension plan brought him followers he numbers in the millions, promised them another plan today—this one on politics.

The doctor said he "could offer" the plan now and "will offer it a little later."

He made the announcement in a signed statement published in the official organ of his pension movement—the National Townsend Weekly—in the midst of conflicting rumors of what role, if any, the organization would play in the new Union Party of Representative William Lemke, North Dakota Republican. Lemke claims Townsendite support.

Not for Any Other Party.

The doctor asked his followers to "please take my word for it, once for all, no matter what the opposition papers may say * * * that I am not adopting the platforms or teachings of other groups or parties."

This should be borne in mind, the doctor said, when "you * * * see me consorting with some strange 'bed fellows' these coming days."

"I have been asked many times * * * why I conferred with Father Coughlin, and why I have allowed my picture to be taken with Gerald K. Smith of the share-the-wealth movement. I am asked * * * if there is to be a merger * * * with these and similar movements.

"My answer has always been 'no merger of any kind is proposed. While I am in sympathy with much of what is being attempted by others * * * the programs announced by these other movements are too complicated for me.'"

Wants Simple Platform.

Dr. Townsend said he wanted his movement to "stand on a very short and simple platform," which he said would be offered at the annual Townsend Club convention in Cleveland next month.

Predicting that "something will happen to replace one or both of the old parties," the pension leader said he had "no wish that the Townsend movement shall become the sole factor in creating this new political alignment" but "I do want the Townsend movement to do its full part."

"Until I have some practical plan to offer or indorse," the doctor concluded, "I do not * * * wish to declare my position."

The doctor has said delegates to the Townsend convention would decide the campaign stand. He has been quoted as saying he personally might support Lemke or still another candidate. One thing is known: Lemke will address the convention.

San Francisco Sending Good-Will Envoy Here

San Francisco's "good will" ambassador, Walter G. Swanson, who is honorary commissioner of the Golden Gate International Exposition and general manager of the San Francisco convention and tourist bureau is scheduled to arrive in Washington tomorrow.

Swanson is coming to attract tourists to visit the new 4½-mile bridge linking San Francisco with Oakland, the proportions of which, he describes, as "so huge as to cause national engineers to estimate that it will be a thousand years before a greater bridge is built in the world."

Poet's Birthday

By William Lyon Phelps

Elizabeth Browning.

Elizabeth Barret Browning died in Florence June 29, 1861.

She was born in 1806 in England, and was six years older than her famous husband. When he first saw her in 1845, he was 33 and she was 39. He was a healthy, vigorous, brilliant young man, and a social light, with fashionable whiskers and clothes of the latest cut, an extremely eligible bachelor. She was an invalid and a tiny creature.

* * * *

But it was the ideal marriage, for all the disparity in health, vigor, and age. She was 100 per cent feminine, a woman to her fingertips. He was the same percentage masculine. Each was the perfect complement of the other.

Intellectually they had everything in common, though this fact does not always make for success in marriage. They were both great poets, and both excellent Greek scholars. They read Greek plays in the original as easily as the ordinary man reads a newspaper.

There was always in their married life the element of romantic wonder. She always regarded him as the knight who had brought her from imprisonment to liberty; he always regarded her as one infinitely precious who had confided her whole life to his care. This is the way she thought about it.

My own beloved, who hast lifted me
From this drear flat of earth where I was thrown,
And in betwixt the languid ringlets, blown
A life-breath, till the forehead hopefully Shines out again, as all the angels see,
Before thy saving kiss! My own, my own,
Who camest to me when the world was gone,
And I who looked for only God, found thee!
I find thee; I am safe, and strong, and glad,
As one who stands in dewless asphodel,
Looks backward on the tedious time he had
In the upper life—so I, with bosom swell,
Make witness, here, between the good and bad,
That Love, as strong as Death, retrieves as well.

Holt Upbraids, Hillman Backs Administration

Spirited Debate Between Pair Close Tamiment Institute Session.

By the Associated Press.

Camp Tamiment, Pa., June 28.—A spirited debate between Senator Rush Holt, of West Virginia, and President Sidney Hillman, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, over the Roosevelt Administration closed the Tamiment Economic and Social Institute today.

The conflict between Holt and John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers of America, was aired freely, with Hillman siding strongly with Lewis while disclaiming any desire "to turn this into a discussion about West Virginia politics."

Lewis supported and Holt opposed the successful campaign of Senator Neely for renomination in West Virginia a few weeks ago. Holt's opening speech at the final meeting of the four-day conference of labor and right wing Socialist group was a round denunciation of Lewis and the latter's support of the new Guffey coal bill, against which Holt filibustered just before Congress adjourned.

Assails Guffey Bill.

"I'm proud that I talked the Guffey bill to death," said Holt. "It would start price fixing, and that is a step toward fascism which would end only with fixing prices for everything that men and women use or consume."

He asserted he believed Lewis was insincere and imbued with a desire to "tell Congress what to do and make 'em like it."

"I say that we have a right to resent your stooping to the filibuster to defeat this bill, which the House passed overwhelmingly and for which two out of three Senators were ready to vote," declared Hillman in reply.

"You boast that you were supported by labor in your campaign; yet now you deny labor this law which would give protection against the coal operators. Well, that is your privilege."

Holt, openly at outs with the Administration on the WPA, said that "political ward heelers, parasites and termites" had been given administrative positions, "taking bread out of the mouths of thousands of families."

Hillman Backs Democrats.

Hillman's response was that in 1932 a Senate committee had denied "there was any need for relief, and now, although the program of the New Deal may have many faults, it remains that 10,000,000 people have work and food for their families."

He urged his hearers to support the Democratic Party in the fall Presidential election, and to begin laying the foundation now for the formation of an independent labor party, "in every State" to assure having labor officials in State and national legislative bodies in future years.

Chester M. Wright, editor of International Labor News, urged full support of President Roosevelt for re-election.

'United Front' Call Issued to Farmers

St. Paul, Minn., June 28 (AP).—A call for fomation of a "united front" among farmers went out tonight to agricultural groups of 25 States.

It came from headquarters of the National Farmers Holiday Association, storm center of the violent rural "strikes" that paralyzed movement of farm products in the mid-West in 1932 and 1933.

Groundwork for the union—intended to include all farm groups "which have as their chief objective production for use"—will be laid at the Holiday Association's annual convention starting Tuesday, association president John Bosch, of Minneapolis, announced.

Foreclosures on farm homes, the cause of the "strikes" of a few years ago, will be another prime topic for action at the meeting, Bosch said. The drought situation also was promised a full share of attention.

9 Nebraska U. Scientists Dig For New Data on Ancient City

Archeologists Hope to Uncover Skulls or Possibly Whole Skeletons of Men They Believe Lived on Prairie 4,000 Years Ago.

By the Associated Press.

Lynch, Nebr., June 28.—Nine University of Nebraska archeologists, stripped to the waist, toiled in a boiling sun today in nearby pits on rolling prairies to learn more details of men they asserted lived 4,000 years ago in the State's largest prehistoric city.

Visitors went to the pits to see what Dr. Earl H. Bell, leader of the expedition, described as one of the largest ancient cities on this continent.

Corn, two types of beans, pottery, arrowheads, bone tools and weapons, flint chips, charcoals and bones of buffalo, deer and elk have been found in pits on the farms of Harold Stewart and Vinc Jehorek.

From this evidence the scientists asserted early men of this capital city 4,000 years ago were an agricultural people of high culture who knew the value of irrigation in this spring-moistened Ponca Creek Valley.

Dr. Bell described the early men as intelligent Indians and said they apparently lived in a semisubterranean type home which probably was the forerunner of later houses of this type discovered in the Midwest. No evidence was found to determine definitely the type of early man that lived in the city—said by the scientists to be about 3 miles long and ½ mile wide—but the party continued digging, hoping to unearth a burial ground with skulls or possibly whole skeletons.

After the surface of the soil on the pasture land, never touched by the white man's plow, was broken, the scientists first discovered evidence of the Ponca civilization of the seventeenth century. That evidence was near the surface and then sand from six inches to five feet deep was unearthed. Bell said it undoubtedly was a primitive desert.

Below the sand was evidence of the capital city, the black soil of this area being three inches to two feet deep. Below this was black soil which gave the party evidence—flint chips and charcoal—of a third prehistoric era.

Bell said he believed the men of this early period, who lived centuries before the primitive capital city was settled, were nomads who hunted and had little culture. By more digging the scientists hope to learn more of this area and Dr. F. A Carlson, Ohio State University geographer, and Dr. Willem Van Royen, University of Nebraska geographer, aided in the investigation.

Drought Aid Launched

inspection tour of the blighted areas in the Southwest. Tomorrow in St. Paul, WPA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins is to meet with his Western aids and State officials to arrange relief measures.

The Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture, which now has on its pay rolls several thousand farmers in the drought areas, is in a positoin to expand its works program indefinitely at short notice, Hugh H. Bennett, head of the service, revealed last night.

Plan Dam Construction.

In the Dakotas, water ponds could be built on the farms, while in the Southern States terraces, dams and water gullies could be constructed, Bennett pointed out.

"We've neglected the problem of soil erosion so long," he declared, "that we have more work than we can possibly do."

Fears that destruction of crops will result in higher food prices were scouted by A. G. Black, head of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Wheat prices have already risen in anticipation of a short spring wheat crop, he said, while a short corn crop should not make itself felt in the price of hogs until next year.

"The little pigs are being fattened and are coming into the market no matter what happens to the corn crop," he said. "The seasonal rise in hog prices in the fall should not be higher than usual."

The winter wheat crop, most of which is ripe for harvesting, is expected to come through the drought in good condition, Black said. Harvesting has already begun in the Panhandle of Texas and Oklahoma and is spreading through Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. All five States have a crop officially estimated on June 1 at 240,000,000 bushels.

With a short spring wheat crop in prospect, farmers are reported to be storing their grain in hope of better prices toward the close of the summer.

Rain Fall Slight.

Crop estimates, Black said, indicate that the corn crop in Iowa, Illinois and Indiana has not yet been seriously affected by drought. If the dry spell continues another two weeks, the situatioin might become critical, he said.

Yesterday's weather reports of the afflicted area were not promising. A sprinkling rain of .01 of an inch was reported at Sheridan, Wyo., late Saturday night but yesterday afternoon the temperature had mounted to 106 degrees, the highest ever recorded at Sheridan by the Weather Bureau.

At Bismarck, N. Dak., it was 96 degrees yesterday afternoon while throughout the Midwest temperatures ten and more degrees above normal were reported. The last rain over 1 inch in the entire area occurred Friday at Sioux City, Iowa, the bureau said.

The Associated Press summarized conditions as follows:

A water shortage was threatened in the South Central Ozarks in Missouri and Arkansas. Springs, wells and cisterns were drying up, and streams were low. Many farmers were hauling water from nearby towns.

Fruit, corn and vegetables were hardest hit in Louisiana. The worst of the drought was broken by rains in Mississippi, but the delta cotton section needed more water.

Wholesalers around Memphis, Tenn., were sending West for fruit and vegetables a month before the usual time. Prices were mounting. Feed and truck crop loss in this region was estimated at 25 to 80 per cent.

Rains within the last week improved the Georgia situation, but farm experts said loss already totaled $40,000,000.

Kentucky had had no general rain since May, but tobacco growers said their crop could be revived to normal if moisture came within a week or two. Much of the State's corn crop could also be saved, it was estimated.

Short crops were predicted in the Carolinas as a result of the long dry spell, although heavy rains fell during the last week. "Many millions" was the most definite estimate of damage.

Milk prices rose a cent a quart in Cleveland as Ohio began to feel the feed shortage. Pastures were burned brown.

A "serious" milk shortage was threatened at Evansville, Ind., due to poor pasturage. The oats crop was beginning to dry up in Indiana, and corn leaves started to curl.

New Altitude Mark Set for 2-Seated Gliders

Elmira, N. Y., June 28 (AP).—Albert Slatter, of Los Angeles, and John D. Batterson, of Pasadena, Calif., set a new national altitude record of 5,760 feet for two-seated gliders at the seventh national soaring meet today.

The mark, also the contest record, also may have established a new world record for the type, Charles H. Gale, a contest official, said.

Meanwhile, Chester J. Decker, of Glen Rock, N. J., 1935 junior champion, completed the first "point and return" glider flight. He flew 6.4 miles to the Corning Beacon and back, the first time, officials said, that a round-trip flight has been made.

D. C. Better Business Aid Attends U.S. Convention

The American Better Business Bureau reported at its annual convention in Boston yesterday that it had saved the American consumer millions of dollars through its "Truth In Advertising Campaign."

Among representatives at the convention is Mrs. Sally Muchmore, assistant manager of the Washington Better Business Bureau.

Soviet to Grant Large Families State Pensions

New Law Will Give 2,000 Rubles for Each Child After Sixth.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, June 28.—All families in the Soviet Union with more than six children, the youngest of which is under 5, begin immediately to receive state pensions.

A "big family" law to this effect was promulgated last night.

Divorced persons will have to pay 50 per cent of their incomes for the support of their children and divorces will be made more difficult by heavy taxation.

Many fathers, it was announced this morning, who for years have refused to support their children, began making payments, fearing the punishment of two years' imprisonment provided for dodgers of this obligation.

Similarly, a sharp decrease was reported throughout the nation in the number of operations to avoid childbirth. Such operations now are illegal.

One of the concessions made to public opinion after a "democratic" discussion of the project was a decision to aid families of more than six instead of seven children.

The government will pay 2,000 rubles a year for five years after the birth of the seventh child and give similar aid at the birth of each succeeding child, including the tenth. After the tenth 5,000 rubles will be paid for each new baby.

The law was made retroactive to apply to all families which already have qualified. Public nurseries, where mothers may leave their children while at work, are to remain open for 16 hours instead of 8.

Soviet newspapers said alterations made in the project after the public was permitted to voice critiism constitute proof that the "democratic principles" set out in the new constitution already are in practice.

Marxian Hosts Again Wrestle With the Muse

Are 'Gagging' New Script; Dunn Does It in Scrap; Hollywood Notes.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, June 28.—The saddest spot in Hollywood today is a ramshackle shack on the M-G-M lot, where the three Marx brothers and their four gagmen brew levity for their coming picture.

The Marxmen have a skeleton story for "A Day at the Races," but must work up "funny business" —which is more than 60 per cent of their stuff—in time to pull out for the Middle West July 12 to try it on the dog as a legitimate stage act.

Gloom cluttering the rehearsal hall isn't from lack of laughs, but because of them—the horrible, hollow laughter of comedians at their own wit. This is how it works:

Groucho, as proprietor of a sanitarium, is examining Harpo, who, presumably, is not well, and he is assisted by Chico. About them in attitudes of dejection circle gagsters George Kaufman, Al Boasberg, Robert Pirosh and George Seaton.

Much Ado About What?

Groucho sticks his head under Harpo's coat and listen to his heart, while Chico asks: "Where are you, doctor?"

Groucho: "I'm out to lunch. I'll be back in half an hour."

Boasberg: "That isn't so funny. Maybe he should say, "I don't know. I'm just telephoning the automobile club." A long argument ensues.

Groucho then listens to Harpo from ankle to chin with a stethoscope. As he reaches the throat Harpo blows a toy balloon out of his mouth, and Groucho asks, "Was that your Adam's apple?"

At once a fresh argument arises as to whether the line should be, "That must have been something you et." Harpo holds out for "Adam's apple," on the ground that "there's something funny about Adam's apples," and so it goes, all day long, to the choking sound of rubber hammers on occipital bones.

It calls to mind the profound remark of Director Gregory Ratoff to his assistant, Otto Brower, after looking at rushes of their picture, "Ve got to remember always that ve ain't really vonderful—merely tereefic."

Jimmie Fractures Fist.

James Dunn is a new casualty among Hollywood's punch-and-duck coterie. Immediately after Edward Arnold dislocated a pair of knuckles milling in a "lumberjack fight" scene, Dunn, playing "The Fighter," wrapped his right first to the hard head of Cy Chindell, former Marine Corps middleweight champ, and broke a small bone. His hand is in splints, and remaining fight scenes are postponed at least two weeks.

Margot Grahame and Frances Lister, their separation blown over, will be back in Hollywood July 15, clamoring to do a picture together. The couple fell out and Lister hustled off to England, to be followed later by Grahame.

Katherine Locke, stage actress recently gone Hollywood, reversed all precedents celebrating her birthday, when she presented everyone in the cast of her picture with a present and to top that carried her own cake to a birthday dinner given her by the Jay Gorners. The secret is that Locke thinks birthday gifts are bad luck.

Jean (The Country Doctor) Hersholt is grumbling because he took off 20 pounds playing badminton, only to be ordered to wear a false stomach for his part as a scientist in "His Brother's Wife."

"RUGGLES OF RED GAP." Paramount picturization of the story by Harry Leon Wilson, adapted to the screen by Walter De Leon and Harlan Thompson, featuring Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, ZaSu Pitts, Roland Young, Leila Hyams, Maude Eburne, Lucien Littlefield, Leota Lorraine and Dell Henderson. Directed by Leo McCarey. A revival.

That precious anomaly of the very British Mr. Charles Laughton's giving a profoundly understanding reading of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address as a serious moment in a comedy of hilarious levity is one of the factors that brings "Ruggles of Red Gap" back to the screen of the Little Theater as its Fourth of July week's attraction. Unsupported by other elements of entertainment and intent, this might not be quite reason enough, but when one considers the wealth of humor in this third of Paramount's filmings of the Wilson story, its return may be construed as reasonable cause for red fire and dancing in the streets.

In fashioning his amusing tale of the winning of a typical English butler in a poker game and transplanting to the rugged wilds of our Far West, Harry Leon Wilson indued an antic sense of humor that translates itself into practically perfect screen diversion.

Material that is intrinsically sound from every viewpoint of comedy requirement is lent an added vigor and quality of gusto by the inherent superiorities of a cast that includes in addition to the admirable Mr. Laughton a long list of other accomplished mimes, led by those whose names appear in the small-type paragraph preceding these happy recollections of a sterling bit of celluloid.

The picture, as befits its rank and station, is surrounded by a group of Independence Day week supplementaries that met with the hearty approval of yesterday's opening-day audiences. Foremost among these is "The March of the Presidents," showing interesting views of all the Chief Executives from McKinley to the present Roosevelt, even including a quick, but recognizable, flash of Grover Cleveland.

Hog Record Broken.

Luray, Va., June 28.—L. Ashby Huffman, living at Alma, ten miles south of Luray, has eclipsed any former record in the number of hogs shipped from Luray in one day. Three trucks hauled 124 hogs to the Baltimore market yesterday. The combined weight of the hogs was 22,230 pounds, netting Mr. Huffman $2,446.30.

Thus demonstrating, no doubt, that Alabama has nothing on a canape of caviar or a spiral of anchovies, although these particular stars are of a little more immediate interest to the Capital. On the left is Barbara Stanwyck, who is scheduled to arrive on the screen at RKO-Keith's on Friday in "The Bride Walks Out," and on the right, Robert Taylor, who is currently causing susceptible ladies to swoon in the aisles at Loew's Palace Theater, where he is co-starring with Loretta Young in "Private Number." They are said to be romantically interested in one another and are shown here as guests at a gay party tossed by Ketti Gallian at the Trocadero Cafe in Hollywood.

About the Showshops

"SAN FRANCISCO." If Woody S. Van Dyke, one of the most sure-footed of the contemporary film directors, ever made a mistake, this isn't it!

Into Anita Loos' screen adaptation of Robert Hopkins' novel of the same name Van Dyke has injected a rough-and-ready vigor, a dynamic forcefulness and an emotional and spiritual power that hold an audience in rapt attention and thrilled interest for all but five minutes of two full hours.

BELL.

The thrills that characterize the picture's gripping interest are of various sorts. There is the robust melodrama of the old Barbary Coast, that imparted to San Francisco the doubtful distinction of being the wickedest city on the North American Continent, if not in the world; there is the thrill of grand opera's majestic music, provided by almost a full act of Gounod's "Faust," and there is that final catastrophic spectacle that fairly dwarfs the cataclysmic climax of "The Last Days of Pompeii" by depicting the destruction of the metropolis of the Golden Gate by the earthquake and fire of 1906.

Following this almost unbelievably realistic reproduction of a destructive force that reduced a gay city to a smouldering shambles almost in the twinkling of an eye, comes the most poignant moment in the film—the "Nearer My God to Thee" episode that signalizes the redemption of Blackie Norton, king of the Barbary Coast, whose scoffing was turned to humble suppliance by the manifestation of a Power greater than any he was able to summon within himself.

Here is a moment of spiritual exaltation and emotional intensity that will bring out the handkerchiefs and tear buckets as no picture has done since the courtroom scene of "Madame X." It is the heart-wringing equivalent of ten "Sins of Man" rolled into one overwhelming moment of inexpressible tenderness and beauty.

This then, is the picture that will be revealed to Washington at that Thursday midnight preview in Loew's Fox Theater, preliminary to its regular engagement at Loew's Palace, beginning Friday morning. It was previewed by the local drama desks at Loew's Century Theater in Baltimore on Saturday afternoon, with Irene Weber Sadel, executive secretary of the Loew Washington offices; Norman Pyle, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer itinerant exploiteer de luxe, and Billy Saxton, city manager for Loew's, Inc., in Baltimore, as hosts.

The Baltimore junket was followed by a typical example of the Loew organization's prandial pre-eminence in the comfortable quarters of the Variety Club of Washington, in the Willard, where the starving critics stoked up for the week, while President Roosevelt was surprising everybody over the radio by announcing that after due consideration he had decided not to decline that renomination!

But getting back to "San Francisco," it exceedingly behooves everyone who has a taste for the cinema at its best to scurry about and get himself a ticket for Thursday night's public preview. They are on sale at the Fox, Palace and Columbia box offices at a flat rate of 99 cents per copy. A detailed review of this staggering magic lantern show will appear in this space in due time. Let that be a warning to you.

Although perhaps known only to those who attended Loew's Fox Theater on Friday night, a distinguished star of the films has been a week-end visitor in the National Capital. About 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, there motored into town from Annapolis a small caravan headed by 10-year-old Master Dickie Moore, "juvenile interest" in more feature pictures than you can count on twice the number of your fingers and toes, and his mother, Mrs. J. R. Moore, of Hollywood.

Dickie had just given the United States Naval Academy the once over and already had been impressed into a "personal appearance" on that ramp immediately over Phil Lampkin's head at the Fox, when I met him in Carter Barron's office about half-past 9 Friday night, and was a very tired little fellow. Those big, soft, brown eyes, that would make any Simon Legree throw away his blacksnake whip, had a pretty tough time of it trying to stay open, but the Moore spirit was unimpaired and he replied to every question like the little gentleman he is.

Saturday was spent in sight-seeing and yesterday the party left for points West. Dickie is booked for a week of personal appearances in Detroit the week of July 3, and then, by one of those inexplicable lunacies of the booking offices, is brought back to Atlantic City for a week on the Steel Pier, beginning July 10. He's a grand little guy and deserves a more convenient route than that for his five-week whirl through the East—his first visit to the other side of the continent from his native California and one that he is enjoying hugely, even if it does make a fellow awfully tired, once in a while, to miss all that sleep.

A cordial note from Henning Arnaut, of the team of Nellie Arnaut and Brothers, this week's show-stopper on the stage portion of the bill at the Warner Brother's Earle Theater, brings the welcome information that he and his brother and sister are not to be confused with the original Arnaut Brothers, whose "Two Loving Birds" was a familiar fixture of big-time vaudeville for so many years. The present trio is composed of the sister and younger brothers of the first of the "loving birds," who now are on tour in Europe. The routine of the two acts is to all intents and purposes identical, except that the present exponents of a unique form of artistry appear in persona propria, whereas the Arnaut Brothers always wore the motley and grotesque chalk makeup of the clow. Both acts are sure-fire. So now you know—and so do I.

I must have neglected to tell Charlie about Hains Point. Anyhow, there is only one minor reason why I keep plugging away at this business and don't accept his tip—just to keep from starving to death. That's all.

Broadway

New York, June 28.

Maj. Bowes' shift to an auto sponsor was a scoop in this space, but it remained for Variety to dig up a better story: That Ivy Lee, publicity firm of the Rockefeller dynasty, has been engaged to sell Bowes to the public as a benefactor and friend of youth . . . The thing has tremendous possibilities, if extended to the field of entertainment.

Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn should take over Bela Lugosi . . . Now there is a chappie who needs an intensive good will campaign, expertly conceived . . . The persuasive ad writers might point out that Lugosi is good for the throat, and that he'd walk a mile for a hanging . . . Blackett-Sample Hummert probably will be engaged to prove the curative values of hill billy choir singing . . . Lord and Thomas should initiate a good will campaign for Lou Holtz's cane . . . The Burns Detective Agency may popularize Milton Berle as a kleptomaniac, rather than a deliberate burglar . . . Maj. Bowes' hiring of Ivy Lee may revolutionize the industry . . . . If the Cherry Sisters only had known of N. W. Ayer, today there would be monuments erected to them in the public squares . . . All they needed was a selling campaign and—a good act.

Feuds of Fraudway.

Conditions on Broadway make it an ideal battleground . . . In the first place, you have tension . . . You have jealousies . . . You have women and—whisky . . . Shake these four ingredients together and you have the makings of a Civil War, and then toss in a confusion of deep-seated racial animosities and the very divvil himself couldn't prepare a brew so evil . . . Among the girls, Lupe Velez and Mary Kirk Brown are the liveliest disturbers of the peace . . . They not only became involved in front page hair-yanking, but their sheer attractiveness persuaded men to toss punches over them . . . The columnists are really sorry that these two married and settled down, because they were great copy and there never was a dull moment . . . The only ones and who don't fight on Broadway and in Hollywood are the professional fighters . . . No, I'm wrong there . . . 2 Persons Hurt, Driver Is Seized In Wild Chase

Ft. Belvoir Soldiers Struck by Hit-and-Run Car in Alexandria.

John Williams, of East Darlington, South Washington, is being held at police headquarters in default of $1,500 bond, on charges of hit-and-run, and reckless driving.

Sergt. William J. Woods and Private K. L. Johnson, of Fort Belvoir, were struck by a car allegedly driven by Williams, while they were attempting to start their stalled car on North Patrick street early yesterday.

John Beck, who saw the accident, pursued Williams and overtook him at Columbia pike and the Lower road. Williams, in the meantime, had sideswiped a car with South Carolina license tags, and when Beck attempted to halt him, he also collided with Beck's car. Beck called the Alexandria police and Williams was taken to headquarters.

Sergt. Woods and Private Johnson were given first aid treatment at the Alexandria Hospital. Woods suffered face bruises requiring 14 stitches, and a fracture of the shoulder blade. Johnson suffered a broken ankle and bruises.

Both men, after receiving treatment, were removed to Walter Reed Hospital, Washington.

A free day nursery for colored children of mothers who have no means of support and are unable to seek or accept employment because of the children, has been opened, and application for the enrollment of children may be made to Miss Barbara Watkins, superintendent of public welfare, at her office in the City Hall Buliding. Enrollment will be limited to children between the ages of 2 and 6.

The nursery is conducted by the Works Progress Administration of Virginia, with the assistance of various clubs and organizations of the city.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Hollywood, June 28.

The flicker, "San Francisco," has one of the most terrifying scenes ever put on celluloid—the earthquake. Director W. S. Van Dyke, who has gone to Africa and Alaska to make pictures, proves that he can create as much excitement on a Hollywood sound stage.

WALLACE BEERY.

Most of the earthquake sequences was filmed on the stage. Some of it was shot outdoors, and throughout this scene is a workmanlike job of sprinkling miniatures and mountage shots. It is, however, to Director Van Dyke's credit and to the credit of the Metro technical department, that such an excellent effect as the earth splitting and widening was able to be done on the stage. A special elevated stage, with two platforms, was built. Long, strong cables were attached to both platforms and men at both ends pulled the cables—the pulse-hopping lightning sequence, which starts the big fire, was filmed outside and near Wallace Beery's dressing room. Special poles with cables were erected, and at a given signal the wired poles were allowed to fall against the regular wires and create the sensational flashing. Precautions were taken so this scene wouldn't get out of control.

Many of the shots in which buildings are seen to collapse were filmed on the sound stage. For days, one could walk on this stage and see the wreckage of the studio-made bricks. It is really amazing how much was actually done. There was plenty of noise at Metro. The earthquake scene is one of the finest examples of the value of sound in pictures. It is the sound which makes this sequence frightening. Play the same scene without the noise and it loses much of the terror.

As it rocks and thunders, the earthquake in "San Francisco" is one of the great scenes of sound pictures.

ROBERT HOPKINS, who is credited with the original story of "San Francisco" is a character. Hoppy, as he is known at Metro, does his writing by pacing up and down the main street of the studio. He seldom goes to his office and never writes there. He works out a story in detail while walking and then recites it to a producer.

Hoppy comes from San Francisco. He used to burn portraits on leather of the vaudevillians who played the leading theaters there. This was how he got interested in show business. Now, he is one of the high salaried writers at Metro, and they permit him to work in his peculiar manner.

Concerning the actual San Francisco earthquake, there is this story, told by Jim Cofforth and said to be true. There was a huge colored man, Bucko Bailey, who was well liked except when he got drunk. Then he became a rowdy and got into fights and wrecked places. Bucko would apologize later and everyone would forgive him.

One night he was in Spider Kelly's saloon. Bucko was drunk. He started bragging and then grabbed the bar and shook it. There was a loud rumbling. It was the earthquake. The saloon was wrecked. Bucko Bailey stood amazed. He said: "Mr. Kelly, I didn't know I had that much strength."

Tax Collections For Arlington Show Increase

County Treasurer Charles T. Jesse reports a better collection of taxes thus far this year than in any recent year. All taxes unpaid as of July 1 will be subject to a 6 per cent deliquency penalty, he said.

Of the total 1935 levies amounting to $709,907, only approximately 20 per cent, or $146,853, remains uncollected, according to Jesse's report.

The county board will meet today to consider a dog ordinance drafted by Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas.

The ordinance was drawn up at request of the board to rid the county of several hundred stray dogs.

Douglas' ordinance would make it unlawful for any dog to run at large, and instructs policemen to destroy dogs found running at large or return them to their owners, where the ownership is known.

The Arlington Hospital Association will sponsor a benefit donkey baseball game on the Arlington Athletic Association field at Ballston Wednesday at 8:30 p. m.

The game will be played between the Ballston Athletic Association and the Marcey Brothers' team.

Boonsboro, Md. Will Rededicate Memorial Shaft

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Boonsboro, Md., June 28.—On July 4, 1827, a little group of residents of this Washington County town, located at the foot of South Mountain, climbed to the summit and erected the first monument in the United States to the memory of George Washington.

This Saturday, 109 years later, residents of this town will rededicate the recently restored shaft of limestone with impressive exercises.

Dr. H. Curley Byrd, president of the University of Maryland, will deliver the principal address and a squad from the American Legion Post here will fire a volley from the same spot where more than a century ago three veterans of the Revolutionary War fired a salute as the monument was completed.

History relates that a 7 a. m. July 4, 1827, a party of men met in the public square here and, under the command of George K. Hardy, marched to Blue Rocks with the determination to spend the day at hard labor erecting a monument to the Father of His Country. The foundation had been laid the previous day.

The address of dedication was made by the Rev. Clingham, an aged survivor of the Revolution.

The original monument was 54 feet in circumference and 15 feet high. Today's monument, on the base of the original, is 35 feet in height. It was restored early this year by the CCC, under the direction of the Maryland Department of Forestry.

When the marker was erected, the orator, on the occasion of its dedication, said: "It has strength I think will preserve it for ages." But in 1882, the monument had partially collapsed and the Odd Fellows lodge of this town restored it. Fifty years later it again was falling apart, when the people of the town bought the land and deeded it to the forestry department, which cleared off the land surrounding the monument and established a park.

Preceding the rededication Saturday, a luncheon will be given for guests by a committee of citizens headed by Dr. J. Hubert Wade, a member of the State Conservation Commission, who is a resident of Boonsboro. Among guests who will speak at the ceremonies at the monument are: Herbert Evison, representing the National Park Service, Washington; F. W. Besley, head of the Maryland Forestry Department, and Harvey S. Bomberger, president of the Washington County Historical Society.

Members of the committee arranging for the rededication, besides Dr. Wade and Mr. Besley, are: Burgess D. Frank Miller, Mr. Bomberger, John A. Wilson, of the Boonsboro Community Club; Frank Warrenfelts, of the Lions Club; Walter Shifler, of the Odd Fellows; John B. Alexander, of the Red Men; Herbert F. Hutzell, of the Junior Order, U. A. M., and W. H. Metz, of the American Legion.

Beer Champ Drinks ½ Gal. in 19 Seconds

Milwaukee, June 28 (AP).—Raymond Du Val, a 200-pound husky from Green Bay, Wis., today claimed the world's championship for fast, full-fraught and fluent beer drinking.

He defeated last year's Neptune of the golden foam—Floyd Verette, of Milwaukee—a 292-pound truck driver, who improved his 1935 performance.

The new titleholder, a student of Verette's flowing, gulpless technique, put away half a gallon of beer in 19 seconds flat.

Experts said it was an astounding exhibition of virtuosity.

Endeavor Union Closes Meeting

Westminster, Md., June 28 (AP).—Dr. Fred G. Holloway delivered the final serman to the annual meeting of the Maryland Christian Endeavor Union today.

Dr. Holloway, president of Western Maryland College, conducted the morning service for the 600 delegates to the three-day meeting. Dr. Lawrence C. Little assisted.

Miss M. Virginia Hopkins, of Baltimore, associate junior superintendent of the Christian Endeavor in the State, provided the music for the service. About 450 persons took part in the communion service.

The final day of the session opened with an early-morning watch service, led by Dr. Little. Wilson Boswell, of Brookeville, presided over a study service and Howard Chaney, of Baltimore, read the Scriptures.

Steel Activity, 71½ Per Cent, Is Year's Peak

Highest Rate in Six Years Reached Just Before Price Advance.

Steelworks operations in the final week of June set a new 1936 record, reaching the highest rate since May, 1930, under a rush of last minute orders from customers desirous of escaping the third-quarter increase in prices, says Steel.

Large orders for structural steel and railroad car construction were among major factors in the 1-point rise of the national operating rate to 71½ per cent. Producers will enter the third quarter with a large accumulation of specifications to cushion the tapering-off in July. This week operations will decline because of the July 4 holiday.

Operations have maintained an average of 62.6 per cent in the first six months of this year, compared with 47.1 per cent in the same period last year.

By a narrow margin, automobile assemblies dropped below the 100,000 mark for the first week since March 28. However, several manufacturers thought to have completed purchases of material for this season, placed orders for additional steel. Ford placed specifications for 30,000 cars and Chevolet came into the market for steel for 23,000. Assemblies last week were off 1,038 units from the previous week to 99,895.

Shape awards totaled over 35,000 tons, a substantial increase. Railroad car construction included the placing of 4,720 cars, 1,000 steel underframes and six locomotives. Last week's awards were the best since the week ended May 23, when 6,900 freight cars were awarded.

Tin Plate at 100 Per Cent.

After seven consecutive weeks at full 100 per cent of capacity, tin plate producers see no sign of seriously reduced activity. Some mills are three to four weeks behind on shipments of hot-rolled plate and about seven weeks in arrears on cold rolled.

Leading strip producers last week began declining additional orders at second-quarter prices as heavy backlogs piled up, which have been drawn upon heavily, became more apparent.

Steel's survey of the first half of 1936 shows that in most products the record of the first half of 1930 was almost equaled. Steel for freight car awards was about 200,000 tons ahead of 1935; shape awards were up 33 per cent; steel rail orders 77 per cent; ingot output 33 per cent, and auto production 9 per cent.

Lumber Production Exceeding Shipments

The lumber industry during the week ended June 20 stood at 69 per cent of the 1929 weekly average of production and 65 per cent of 1929 shipments. For the tenth consecutive week, production exceeded new orders and for the seventh week, it exceeded shipments.

Reported production during the week ended June 20 of 6 per cent fewer mills was 3 per cent below revised production figures of the preceding week; shipments were 5 per cent below and new orders 3 per cent above that week, according to reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations covering the operations of important hardwood and softwood mills.

British Cotton Mills Running at High Rate

New York, June 28.—One of the brightest phases of the world cotton spinning industry is the relatively high rate of spinning activity and cotton consumption in England, according to the New York Cotton Exchange Service. During the ten months of the current season to the end of May, British spinners have used more cotton than in the corresponding portion of any previous season since 1928-1929.

"Great Britain is the brightest spot in that portion of the foreign cotton-spinning industry which uses American cotton in volume," says the Exchange Service.

United Air Passengers Gain 36% in 5 Months

New York, June 28 (AP).—Passengers on United Air Line's routes in the first five months of this year increased 36 per cent over the same 1935 period, W. A. Patterson, president, reported.

In the same period mail increased 9 per cent and express 47 per cent.

By Roger W. Babson.

Babson Park, Mass., June 28.—Utility managers are becoming more sensible and hopeful. The perplexing problems of the past three years are gradually being overcome. The storm of popular resentment against the industry is rapidly blowing out.

The skies are clearing, at least temporarily. Holders of power and light securities now have a "breathing spell,' although the legality of the Public Utility Holding Co. act still remains to be settled by the Supreme Court.

Of all the controversial questions of the past three years, none has brought forth a more divided opinion than the utility issue. Those who know all the facts feel that the industry did need a spanking. On the other hand, they believe that the Administration's humbling process was too harsh and degenerated into persecution. Through it all the investing public have been the innocent sufferers. As investors, they put up the capital to finance the utilities. Now, as taxpayers, they are forced to dig down for additional funds to destroy their original investment.

Boom Irregularities.

Most of my friends, even among the utilities, agree that there were rank irregularities in the industry during the boom era. In order to eliminate these malpractices, an elaborate legislative program was directed against the industry. Extravagant publicly financed "yardstick" projects were started. Municipalities were encouraged to go into active competition with private plants. Taxes of all kinds and varieties were slapped on the companies.

The aim apparently was to drive the private concerns out of business and replace them with municipally-owned projects. The chief result to date has been a tremendous loss in the value of pyramided power and light securities, although it must be admitted that consumers have securied great rate reductions.

The core of the whole controversy seems to lie in the simple question: Does municipal or private ownership bring the cheapest rate and the best service? Reams have been written on the subject—pro and con. This all seems unnecessary for there are enough municipal and private systems operating in the country to give a definite decision on the point.

Impartial Study Needed.

Why cannot an impartial comparison of rates and taxes be made? The result should then show definitely whether municipal or private operation is the more efficient, providing, of course, that the public plants pay taxes and keep their books on the same basis as the private operating companies.

The Federal Trade Commission has made just such a study. The results show small residential customers of municipal plants have a lower bill, on the average, than those served by private companies. But taxes paid by the municipal plants were much less than those paid by the privately-owned concerns. When this fact enters into the computation, the advantage of municipal ownership is questionable. Moreover, when the cutsomer of a municipal plant uses above a certain amount, his bill is more per kilowatt-hour than if it were a privately owned plant, regardless of taxation. The gap between the two charges steadily widens in favor of the private company as the amount of juice consumed increases.

Politics a Factor.

The results of this study were not startling. The experience of most nations has been that the private operation of business seems to be more efficient than municipal or State management. Why? The answer is "politics." I have not the least doubt that public operation of great industries such as the railways, power, dairy, gasoline, restaurants and the like would be far more efficient and economical than private operation—if politics could be eliminated. Unfortunately, experience clearly shows that, bad and inefficient as private management in many cases is, public operation is worse! Only more religion and education can bring honest and efficient operation of public enterprises.

The utility industry as a whole has a wonderful operating record. Employment is 88 per cent of the 1929 level, while average weekly earnings of employes are $31.45—the fourth highest figures for all industries. The average cost of electricity has steadily declined from 25 cents per kilowatt hour in 1882 to only 4.75 cents today. While the general price level has jumped 50 per cent since the bank holiday, electric rates have come down 15 per cent. Meanwhile, power consumption has set new all-time records, even though the Babsonchart is still 5 per cent below normal. This increase is due partly to declining rates, but primarily to lower prices and easier credit-terms on household appliances. Furthermore, we have scarcely tapped the potential market for certain appliances!

Ontario Consumption.

Take water-heating and cooking, for example. The average customer of the publicly owned Ontario Hydro-Electric uses 1,700-kilowatt hours per year, compared with only 650-kilowatt hours for United States consumers. In both countries the consumption, for lights and minor appliances is about the same—600-kilowatt hours. The Ontario householder, however, uses 1,100-wilowatt hours for cooking and water-heating against every rare use for that purpose in the United States. While rates may be a minor consideration in the purchase of a refrigerator or a radio, they are a very important factor when considering the purchase of a water-heater or electric range. It rates for these latter uses are cut, weekly power sales of about 2,000,000,000-kilowatt hours could double.

With the politicians' inability to keep poular resentment against the industry at white-heat, security holders are again taking heart. The total value of all utility stocks has more than doubled in a year Earnings are steadily picking up despite the 15-20 per cent tax increase since 1932. Most power stocks are selling around 15 times earnings, while the more popular industrials are priced at 20 or more times current net income. With this good earnings picture plus the prospect of justice from the Supreme Court, utility stockholders have now only new taxes and franchise expirations to fear.

Bank Sees Cataclysm In Federal Largesse

Boston, June 28.—The First National Bank's monthly letter will say tomorrow: "Reduction in governmental expenditures is a prerequisite to a balanced Federal budget. A balanced budget is a prerequisite to impregnable Federal credit. Impregnable Federal credit is a prerequisite to sound currency. Sound currency is the corner stone of national happiness and prosperity.

"The First National Bank of Boston has consistently and persistently advocated a reduction in governmental expenditures. Today the danger of inflation is greater than ever, due to the seeming disregard by Government of its continually mounting deficits.

"We are living in a Fool's Paradise if we believe that the present rate of Government spending can long continue without causing a crash entailing misery beyond anything yet experienced.

"The budget can and must be balanced before it is too late."

1936 Revenue Act Analyzed by Bache

Rail Credit Corp. To Pay $735,881

The Railroad Credit Corporation will make its twenty-ninth liquidating distribution tomorrow to participating carriers, amounting to $735,881, or 1 per cent of the contributed fund. Of this amount $401,616 will be paid in cash and $334,265 will be credited on carriers' indebtedness to the corporation.

This will bring the total amount distributed to 51 per cent of the fund, or $37,529,916. Of this total $17,918,732 will have been returned in cash and $19,611,184 in credits.

Industrial Rise Is Maintained For 3d Month

Corporate Financing for 5 Months Highest Since 1931.

New York, June 28.—Industrial activity advanced for the third consecutive month during May, according to the regular monthly survey of the National Industrial Conference Board. Substantial increases were reported by the residential building, steel and electric power industries. These were only partially counterbalanced by declines in the automobile, nonresidential construction, and coal industries.

Indexes of trade and distribution reflect a continued advance. Department store sales, adjusted for the number of shopping days in the month, were 3.5 per cent higher than in April, and 15.7 per cent higher than a year ago. Rural retail sales, seasonally adjusted, rose to a new high point for the recovery period. Carloadings of miscellaneous freight advanced to a point 23.2 per cent greater than during May, 1935.

Commodity prices at wholesale fell to a new low level for 1936 in the middle of May, and have recovered only slightly since that time. Retail commodity prices, however, were about the same as a year ago.

Corporate security flotations during the first five months of 1936 were higher than for any comparable period since 1931, according to the regular monthly survey of business conditions of the National Industrial Conference Board.

Refunding issues continue to represent a large proportion of corporate security flotations. In the first five months of 1928, refunding issues comprised 35 per cent of total financing. In the 1929 period, they amounted to only 17 per cent. In recent years they have become more significant, amounting to 80 per cent of the total in the first five months of 1935, and 85 per cent in the corresponding period of 1936.

The Federal Diary

One hundred years ago next Monday the man who designed the Washington Monument, the old Treasury Building, the old Patent Office, the Smithsonian Institution and other landmarks around the city, became the first Federal architect.

From that day when Robert Mills took office in one room with a couple of clerical helpers, the supervising architect's office, as it is now called, has grown to occupy half a building that covers a city block and to employ about 2,000 men and women.

The Architect's office of today is celebrating that century of growth with an elaborate dinner on the Hotel Washington roof which a number of prominent Government officials will attend next Monday night.

As much as any other Government agency—perhaps more—the Supervising Architect's office has left its mark on the country, for the Nation is dotted with buildings designed and erected under its direction. The job of the Supervising Architect is either completely to design and supervise construction of Government buildings or to cooperate with outside architects on the work.

The latest Government building in Washington to be occupied is the National Archives edifice although some work on the interior is still incomplete. The newest one to be approved for construction with work actually begun is the $5,000,000 home for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, just south of the Agricuture Building. Ground for this building was broken recently.

Late in the spring a monument to that first Federal architect, Robert Mills, was dedicated with the present architect, Louis A. Simon, conducting the ceremonies. Simon has been in the office since 1900 and two years ago was promoted to be its head.

Up to the time of Mills' appointment, Government building work was done by the Treasury Department, and early records show it came under the personal supervision of the Secretary himself. There was no co-ordination—some of the buildings were good, others were not—and it was felt that a better job would be done if a qualified architect took over the building program for the Nation as a whole.

Among the early buildings that were put up outside of Washington under the first Federal architect were the Boston Customs House and the one in New Orleans. Mills held the job for six years and then resigned to open private offices in Washington and for ten years the department had no head. Then one of his assistants, who had actually designed the Boston Customs House, Ammi B. Young, took Mills' place.

Edwin B. Morris, assistant in charge of the architectural section, separate from the engineering section of the office, is in charge of the committee arranging for the centennial celebration next week. Other members of the committee include Robert Mayo, jr., G. R. Roberts, T. C. Coleman, E. E. Whitcraft, E. R. A. Litzau, R. S. Hart, and G. A. Daidy.

The Athletic and Recreational Association of the Department of Agriculture requests a special announcement in this column today.

"Special low cost tours to New York and Chicago are being arranged for the Fourth of July weekend by the association. For information call Mrs. Roby W. Stehr, Di. 6350, branch 523."

The Women's Union of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Local 105, of the National Federation of Federal Employes, sent a telegram of thanks the other day to President Roosevelt for signing the bill providing for a 40-hour week for more than 3,200 employes of the bureau. The union also sent a word of appreciation to President Luther C. Steward and Secretary-Treasurer Gertrude M. McNally for their efforts in getting the bill through Congress.

The independent offices act of 1935 provided a 40-hour week for the bureau's employes in mechanical trades. This affected only 80 people and it has now been extended to include all employes in the bureau.

The Railway Mail Association, an American Federation of Labor affiliate, composed of about 20,000 Government employes who tend to the mails while speeding between different parts of the country, recently obtained administrative action from the Postoffice Department adjusting their hours of service, which had become all mixed up with the advent of the streamline speed trains.

The situation which the high-speed luxury trains brought to the men in the postal cars tearing across the country at a mile a minute was that they covered such tremendous distances in such a short time, that they found their working schedules called for additional trips taking them from their homes and causing other conditions which needed adjusting.

The matter was taken up by the Railway Mail Association with the Postoffice Department. Harllee Branch, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, recently approved an adjustment whereby the working hours of railway postal employes are reduced three minutes per day for each speed mile on trains which exceed 45 miles an hour. In other words, those working on the crack train between Chicago and Denver which averages 63 miles an hour work about 4 hours and 30 minutes a day. The average day, prescribed by law is 5 hours and 20 minutes for 6 days a week.

J. F. Bennett, president of the association, explained that the average number of round trips a year was about 108 while with the high-speed trains it would take 125 or 130 round trips to complete the necessary working hours under the old system.

"This took the men away from home and worked other hardships which the department was only too ready to adjust," he said.

"All work and wages are figured on a yearly basis, so the adjustment was easy."

The details of the change were worked out by Stephen A. Cissler, head of the railway and air mail service in the department.

"We made what we call a differential adjustment," Cissler said.

At the first anniversary dinner tonight of the Resettlement Lodge 206 of the American Federation of Government Employes, some of the familiar names and figures in Government circles are scheduled to speak. Among them are Resettlement Administrator Rexford G. Tugwell, Frank F. Gorman, vice president of the United Textile Workers; Josephine Heffner, secretary and acting president of the A. F. G. E.; Congressman Scott, of California; Congressman Marcantonio, of New York; Michael McDonough, of the American Federation of Labor and others.

On The Air Today

John Heiney, The Post's radio editor, is taking a few days vacation. During his absence this department will be conducted by well-known Washington radio personalities. This morning's guest conductor is Art Brown, of WOL.

Radio Station WOL,
Atop the Annapolis.

Dear John:

Thanks for going away for a few days and giving yours truly an opportunity to present a few thoughts that otherwise might never gain expression. Let's use up a little printer's ink in taking a look-see into what pleases an early morning audience. Eight months ago, when I took over WOL's musical clock, I was surprised to discover that my new charge was Washington's oldest early morning program, designed first among the local 'casters as an eye-opener for those who get up in the middle of the night—7 a. m., or thereabouts. The question was and is—"What kind of radio entertainment mixes well with coffee and buns?" After eight months I would say emphatically "Variety."

Mind you, John, I didn't make up that answer. This answer has been obtained from the radio audience itself: From the letters of praise and criticism, constructive and otherwise—oh yes, we have a complaint department, too—indications are for variety. Any audience would tire of hearing the same type of music morning after morning, even though individuals specifically state their preferences. Time and experience has taught us that the best way to arrange the 30-odd records which time permits each morning is: half to the latest dance tunes in varied rhythm; a definite portion to ballads; a sprinkling of light classics and decidedly a place for novelties (this includes march bands, hill-billy tunes, Hawaiian, instrumental solos and old popular favorites).

If there is a place for my personal opinion in this "clock" routine, I'd give the most important place to time and weather forecasts. Therefore, as you probably are aware, we give time signals every three minutes and the weather situation four times. (When we don't forget.) By the by, we don't charge any extra for John Gantt's personal appearances on the clock.

Wonder if the radio audience gives as much thought to an announcer's tastes? We have our favorites, too. Just to prove how unselfish we are in giving the earcuppers what they like instead of forcing our own opinions on them, check these "firsts" from your correspondent this morning. Good dance bands (favorite right now is Shep Fields. Have you heard his "Bali Bali?" It's swell. Give us a ring and we'll play it for you). The Rise and Shine man also is a push-over for a program full of naturalness. Honors go to Zeke Manners and Gang on WOL daily 1-1:30 p. m. For comedy—chalk one up for Benny and Bob Burns and for "good" music—any symphony orchestra or an organ. Being somewhat of a sport—sman (high seventies for nine) reports on baseball, etc., etc., (and, sssh, the ponies) always attract this listener. Don't ask me my favorite sports commentator locally or I'll have to break down and confess that I always listen to Ted Ostenkamp. What station did you say? WOL, of course.

You said two pages of double-spaced copy . . . and a Brown never turns a fellow down . . . (what I wouldn't give for a phoneygraph record or a gong—or even 100 word spot)! After this holiday why don't you drop around and see us? I've often wondered why it is radio editors never visit the radio stations? Sorry that isn't a week later . . . I could tell you all about my operation—come July 1, I'll be off the air for a bit. Maybe I'll be a crooner when I return.

Gotta go now. Enjoy your trip . . . and thanks for at last letting me "crack" your column. Rise and Shine!

Polish Army Chief's Wife Entertained

Mme. Orlicz-Dreszer Is Honor Guest at Party of Mrs. Watson.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Mme. Gustav Orlicz-Dreszer, wife of the inspector general of the army of Poland, who is here from Warsaw for a short visit, was guest of honor yesterday at a cocktail party given from 5 to 7 by Mrs. Dorothy DeMuth Watson at her home on Kennedy place. Mme. Orlicz-Dreszer is visiting her mother, Mrs. E. G. Neal, and her two daughters, the Misses Margaret and Elvina Rowe.

The hostess wore a yellow chiffon gown, figured in white and soft tones of green, and made with a flowing train. Mme. Orlicz-Dreszer wore a chiffon frock of ankle length, figured in blue and rose, and a dark straw hat trimmed with flowers in the same shades.

Among the guests were several musicians with whom she frequently sang when she lived in Washington and, as Mrs. Elvina Neal Rowe, was one of the Capital's most popular sopranos. There were Mr. and Mrs. Harlan Randall, both of whom are singers, and Dr. George E. Anderson, well known tenor.

The youngest guest at the party and probably the one who received most attention, was the baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Randall, little Miss Judith, just 5 weeks old, who wore a pink jacket over a white dress and a little pink bonnet, tied with pink ribbons. She appeared to enjoy her early debut in Washington society and her presence was one of the interesting features of the afternoon.

Mme. Orlicz-Dreszer did not sing, but her friends hope to have opportunity to hear her informally before she leaves. When she returns to Poland she will present a concert for the benefit of the Maritime and Colonial League, of which her husband, Gen. Orlicz-Dreszer, is president. It is to be presented in Warsaw under the patronage of Mme. Wlaeyslaw Raczkiawicz, wife of the minister of the interior.

Mme. Orlicz-Dreszer expects to sail for Poland in ten days, but will come to Washington again in the winter, probably accompanied by her husband, to visit her mother and daughters.

Mr. Earl Packer, assistant chief of the Eastern European Division of the State Department, and Mrs. Packer, with their guest, Miss Hazel Wolhaupter, who is here from California on her way to England, were among those at the function yesterday. They had taken their breakfast in the morning to Rock Creek Park, then driven to Annapolis and had time to rest for an hour before attending the party.

The Minister of Albania, Mr. Faik Konitza, who is entertaining at a dinner in Mme. Orlicz-Dreszer's honor Thursday night, was among the guests, as were Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Poradzweski, Mr. Edward Weintal and Mr. Michal Budny, attaches of the Polish Embassy; Mrs. Mattie Wyatt Porter, Mr. and Mrs. George Bean, Mrs. Louis Bartlett, Col. Allen Gullion, Maj. William Ray Baldwin, Mr. Cyril Smith, Mrs. Neal, Miss Margaret Rowe, Miss Martha Belle Moore and the Misses Virginia Campbell and Sara Williamson, who are here from Kentucky, as her guests.

Mrs. Watson was assisted by Miss Charlotte Gartland, Miss Anne Morrison, Miss Mary Fletcher and Miss Jessie MacBride.

Miss Cooksey Becomes Bride

Wed to Louis Machlin, Jr., in Church Ceremony at Takoma Park.

The wedding of Miss Mary Emily Cooksey, of Takoma Park, to Mr. Louis Orville Machlin, jr., took place yesterday afternoon at 4:30 in the Seventh Day Adventist Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. H. H. Votaw.

The bride was given in marriage by her cousin, Mr. Norval Guerrier. She wore a gown of ivory satin fashioned with a long train and a veil of lace caught into a cap with orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

The maid of honor was the bride's sister, Miss Jane Cooksey, who wore pink mousseline de soie and carried pink roses and blue delphinium. Helen Seymore, small daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Seymore, was the flower girl and was dressed in blue organdy and carried a blue basket of mixed flowers.

Mr. Machlin had as his best man, Mr. Racque Eichoin, of Glen Dale, Calif. The ushers were Mr. Ralph Royer and Mr. Ernest Stevens, of Takoma Park. After the ceremony, the couple received their friends in the church.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Grover C. Cooksey. The father of the bridegroom, Mr. L. O. Machlin, was among those present at the ceremony.

Mr. Machlin is a graduate of the Washington Missionary College, of which his grandfather, the Rev. Benjamin F. Machlin, was president for many years.

Married In Ceremony Here

MRS. WILLIAM CHESTER CHRISTY, the former Miss Diane Mary Gwynne Maitland, who was quietly married here on Saturday afternoon. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Condon, who are now in France.

Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

Senator Wililam E. Borah will linger today, before beginning his speaking trip in southern Idaho, to celebrate his seventy-first birthday with Mrs. Borah in their apartment on Connecticut avenue. According to Mrs. Borah, neither she or the Senator pay over much attention to birthdays, but the Senator delayed his trip so they might observe his anniversary together.

Mrs. Borah attributes the fact that Senator Borah is hale and hearty despite his 71 years to his keen interest in life and habit of hard work. "Nothing that is human is foreign to me," he repeats with the French philosopher, and after a long day in the Capitol he spends hours in his study on some favorite topic of the moment.

The Senator walks at least part of the way to the Capitol, carrying a bulging brief case, which is a familiar sight in Washington, and returns home in time for a cup of tea and a chat with the congenial folk who gather there whenever the Borahs are in town.

Mrs. Borah adheres to her fondness for birds despite her unfortunate experience with parrot fever some years ago. Their cheery songs can always be heard in the Borah apartment. Several springs ago Mrs. Borah liberated her pet canaries in the room opening on the glassed porch. Some one had left the door open and out flew the canaries, scattering through the fashionable neighborhood. Neighbors tried in vain to capture the runaways. Finally Mrs. Borah set the cage down in the garden, left it, and the canaries all returned.

Tonight Senator Borah will leave for the West and Mrs. Borah will remain here for about two weeks, after which she will join him in Boise for the summer.

Another former Washington woman has stepped into the London court scene and the favored circle of close friends to whom King Edward VIII is often host for weekends at Fort Belvedere, his country place near the British capital.

She is petite Mrs. Ormond Lawson-Johnson, who, with her husband, has been a favorite in London society for several seasons. As Mrs. Lyman Kendall, Mrs. Lawson-Johnson was a brilliant Washington hostess when she presided over Kentland as the wife of the late multimillionaire, Lyman Kendall. Clever, with a flair for smart dressing and the knack of giving affairs to which all clamored to be invited, she was a leader in social life here.

Her debutante daughter, Miss Jane Kendall, now Mrs. George Grant Mason, of New York, was the acknowledged belle of younger Washington society. When she was presented at a large ball in Kentland she was hailed as the most beautiful debutante of that season.

Mrs. Lawson-Johnson was a patron of music and gave many important musicales. It is understood her musicales in London often have royal guests present. Another of the mutual interests of the King and the Lawson-Johnsons is their love of gardening. Mrs. Lawson-Johnson had one of the loveliest gardens in Washington when she occupied Kentland and gave personal attention to her flowers and plants.

Powells Hosts at Supper Party In Historic Home in Alexandria

By Dudley Harmon.

One of the oldest houses in historic Alexandria is the lofty and narrow residence at the corner of St. Asaph and Duke streets, owned by Representative and Mrs. Colgate Darden, of Virginia.

The home of Representative and Mrs. Darden is being occupied this summer by Mr. and Mrs. W. Royce Powell, who returned recently to Washington after several months in New York and entertained there yesterday at a cocktail party and buffet supper. Mrs. Powell is the niece of Mr. Ralph Snowden Hill, one of the legal advisers to the State Department.

The historic home, built about 1746 by Benjamin Dulaney, was originally called the Dulaney Town House, for that cultivated gentleman of leisure preferred to spend the greater part of his time on his nearby estate in Fairfax County. From his hands it passed to Peyton Gallagher, referred to in the annals of the day as George Washington's "man of business," as Washington left his business interests to a large extent in Gallagher's hands.

From a historian's point of view, this house's chief claim to fame lies in the fact that Lafayette addressed an admiring throng of Alexandrians from its steps on his second visit to America in 1824. At that time it was owned by Robert Taylor, a prominent lawyer, whose daughter, Rosalie, was one of the flower girls who escorted the French general on his triumphal ride through the streets of Alexandria.

Several guests of Mr. and Mrs. Powell yesterday had come from the cocktail party given earlier in the afternoon by the Counselor of the Netherlands Legation and Mme. Molekamp in honor of Miss Aletha Harcourt, who has been their guest. Miss Harcourt, who recently returned to this country from her home in England, is off to the Eastern Shore today to paint Mrs. Edmund Tweedy, but will return shortly to the Capital.

Also present at the Powell's home were Mrs. Sherman Aldrich and Baroness Sibyl Carbonelli, of New York, who are spending the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Powell; Adiral Mark Bristol, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hinton, Mrs. William T. Mann, the Second Secretary of the French Embassy, Mr. Claude de Boisanger; Miss Mary Cowles, Mrs. McKenney Mallan and Mr. Donald Downs.

As the summer season in Washington progresses, the gardens for which Alexandria is famous will be the scenes of many an al fresco party. One of the loveliest gardens is that adjoining the home of Col. and Mrs. Harry N. Cootes, who entertain frequently there in the late afternoon and over the week-end. Surrounded by a brick wall, it is shut off from the sounds of the street outside, and a deep fountain has been built in one corner.

Another charming Alexandria garden, also the scene of much entertaining, is that at the residence of the Attache of the Swiss Legation and Mme. Schlatter. It faces on a narrow street at the rear of the house, and every time Mr. and Mrs. Schlatter give a party, small boys from the neighborhood stand on tip-toe behind the low brick wall surrounding the garden and peer solemnly at the guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Schlatter will return to Alexandria the middle of next month from Switzerland, where they have been visiting his mother, Mme. Schlatter-Roll. Mrs. Schlatter is the daughter of the Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Dr. Guillermo Patterson, and before her marriage last winter was Senorita Zoe Patterson.

Baldwins Back After Car Trip

Major and Wife Visit Historic Sites in Virginia in Week's Traveling.

Maj. William Ray Baldwin and Mrs. Baldwin have returned from a week's motor trip through Virginian, on which they visited historic places in the State.

They are particularly interested in the old Virginia estates as they have recently purchased the river farm adjoining Mount Vernon, to which Washington referred in his records as "my river farm on Little Hunting Creek, on the Potomac." It is separated from Mount Vernon by the creek, and the house, which still stands, was referred to by Washington as "my overseer's house."

The Baldwin's, who now live on the historic Baldwin estate at Elk Mills, in Maryland, which has been in the family since before the Revolution, expect eventually to make a summer residence of the newly purchased Virginia farm.

There is much colorful history surrounding Elk Mills and a stone they new use as an outdoor table near the swimming pool there, was once the stone in the old grist mill on which corn was ground to supply colonial troops quartered on the place.

Maj. Baldwin picked up a 6-foot black snake on the trip—quite a harmless reptile, he explains, and left it at the University Club yesterday while he attended a cocktail party. He told friends at the party he had felt tempted to bring it along, but refrained, knowing few persons shared his fondness for snakes.

Mrs. Baldwin leaves today to take their two sons, William Ray, jr., and Daniel Lord Baldwin, to Camp Baldy, Eddington, Me., where they will be for the season.

"Your'e Mamie Moss' cousin, aren't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, Mamie asked me to look you up. I'm Grace Bibb. I guess you know the Harry Bibbs. His sister married a Moss. When Mamie heard I was coming to Washington, she says, 'Grace, whatever you do, you simply must look up Nell Blink. She'l be tickled to death to see someone from home. 'And she knows all the old historical things to see. She'll get you in places——"

"Well . . er . . of course . . you know——"

"The chief person we want to see is Mrs. Roosevelt. And I think we ought to see the President as long as we're here . . . it'll be so educational for the children . Oh, say, have you ever been to Mount Vernon?"

"Mount Vernon?"

"Yes, I thought it would be nice for us to go down there together. Mamie says, 'Grace, whatever you do, get Nell to take you to Mount Vernon. She'll simply adore it.'"

Old Chum.

"Hello . . . yes, this is Nell Blink speaking . . No, I don't . . . . No, you sound familiar . . . No, really, I recognize your voice perfectly, only . . . Is it Ann Dabble? . . . No! Who? . . . The Looker-Up.

"HELLO! Nellie, darling!"

Tillie Babb! When did you get in?"

"Just this morning. You know we're driving up to see the quintuplets and I said to Bert, Bert, whatever we do, we must stop by Washington and see Nell Blink. She'd never forgive us if we passed her up. Well Nell, you look about like you always did—still, I believe you're a little heavier. Haven't married yet?"

"No."

"I suppose you heard about May Spiffenbaum'."

"Spiffenbaum? I don't believe I remember any Spiffenbaums."

"Oh I guess the Sniffenbaums did come after you left. Well May's gone to Reno—everybody says its Sam's fault—and oh yes, Bob and Marie Beetle have split up . . . you know I always did say you were the one he ought to have married . . . and Janey Bunch has another baby—that makes four in six years . . . and both the Buck Martins have remarried; and oh say, guess who I saw the other day—your Aunt Minnie'."

"Aunt Minnie'."

"Yes, she's broken a lot in the last year . . . I forgot I promised Bert I'd be right down. . . he's in the car. Now I tell you what we'll do. We'll all get togeher—I've got a perfectly darling little kodak—and go sightseeing. I think it would be lots of fun to climb the Washington Monument . . . and, Oh, I tell you what we simply must do! Between Train-ers.

"Hello there, Nell Blink!"

"Margie Rush, where on earth did you come from?"

"I just dropped off between trains. Nell, this is Amy Trotter—you've always heard me talk so much about Amy—we thought we'd stop off between trains—we've neither of us ever seen Washington."

"When does your train leave?"

"Oh, not until 4 a. m. I told Amy it wouldn't pay to take a hotel room—maybe you could round up some dates and we could go somewhere and dance.

"Well—er—you see . . ."

"And then I thought we could do all the sights this afternoon . . . it'll be so much nicer for you to take us around. We can visit at the same time. We're both mad about old historical things. We want to see Congress . . . and the Supreme Court . . . and the Cherry Blossoms . . . and the Monument . . . and some of the New Dealers . . . and oh, Nell, whatever you do, you simply must take us to Mount Vernon."

Mother's Lack Of Firm Hand Harms Youths

Parent Who Enjoys Her Fear of Child Makes Him a Bully.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

"I JUST can't make Henry mind. He won't do a thing I say. I've tried everything, even threatened to whip him, but he only laughs.

At heart the mother who says this is probably very proud of Henry. She likes the strong, masterful man whom no woman can control. She may threaten to whip him, but she knows, and so does the boy, that she will never fulfill her threat. She is at heart afraid of him, knows it, and likes to be afraid. No wonder Henry laughs.

Henry despises his mother, and in all probability will eventually despise all women. He is becoming not a strong man but a first-class bully.

Children like and admire strength. They want to be able to trust and lean on their parents, to feel in them a secure refuge. No boy wants to be stronger than his mother.

He may know that her muscular and physical strength are not equal to his, he may realize that she cannot spank him or shut him up in his own room. But he does want to respect her firmness and judgment, and will obey the frailest slip of a mother if he feels her force of character.

Again and again one sees a little mother managing great boys who could lift her in one hand. She never uses physical force, nor does she plead or scold. She probably does not even raise her voice when she gives an order, and certainly she never whines or threatens. She is not proud of naughtiness, and does not admire bullies who have no respect for law and order.

The spotlight of the news, of conversation, of your own interests may fall on any State in the Union. Cousin Bill moved to San Angelo, Tex. Why, it's on the Colorado River! What's that doing down in Texas? Must be two Colorado Rivers.

Then your eye roves over to Nevada. You can't believe it! Reno is farther West than either San Diego or Los Angeles, Calif.!

And what a lot of foreign cities changed their names after the World War! Back to the old native name. Famous old Constantinople became Istanbul (IS-tan-bul). Canton, China, is now often called Kwang-Chow. That peace center, The Hague, sometimes crops up as Gravenhage, though none of us home folks will ever really believe in beginning a word with 's!

Makes you feel proud to know these things, just the same. To be able to tell people that Ethiopia is three times as big as Italy, for instance.

Our handy International Atlas and Gazetteer of the World gives you just the facts you want. Ten maps in full color show in detail the countries of the world. Vivid Beach Towels a Background for Sun-Tanners

Turkish Toweling Makes Bow As a Smart Beach Accessory

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

THE MODERN MERMAID will go to the beach and seashore this Fourth of July holiday swathed in a Turkish towel—that is, a huge towel in gay, giddy color combinations wound smartly around her figure, atop her bathing suit. With one leap, towels definitely have stepped out of the bathroom into the realms of brilliant summer activities and the reverberation has been heard in all smart summer resorts.

Such bold and smart color schemes as red, gold and green; black, brown, red, navy or green with huge white balloon dots; the patriotic red, white and blue in clever geometrical designs; modernistic flower and nautical patterns in literally hundreds of unique motifs, all are part of the present beach towel fashion. These towels, usually 38 by 72 inches, also are used for beach sheets—to spread on the ground, blanket-fashion, when taking a sun-tan. They are easily converted into a robe by simply adding a drawstring to the top to form a neckline—in case the swimmer does not go in for mere draping of the towel over the bathing suit.

While the fashionable towels are of cotton, swimsuits—for those who swim as well as languish on the beach—are of wool. And these suits are winning new laurels this summer, because of the smart and practical details and the alluring colors. Properly-made knit sutis require no more care than rinsing in clear water and drying thoroughly after each swim. Wool prevents chilling and never feels unpleasantly damp against the body—factors of special importance to those who take their swimming in brief dips with long periods of lounging on the sands between swims.

The knit suits are gay in color, smart in styling and have such interesting features as adjustable necklines, lacings which help to adapt the suit top to the figure, removable skirts over sleekly-fitted maillots, and elastic bindings to keep the suit in position when shoulder straps are dropped for sun-tanning. Among the popular color themes in knit swim suits are Bahama blue and white, turquoise and pagan brown, rose and plum, maize and pagan, dusty pink and white or brown.

Skin Tumors.

Let us consider some few of the many tumors to which the skin or the mucous membrane is susceptible. There is a peculiar condition known as leukoplakia, which sometimes occurs in the mouth and is characterized by whitish, patchy areas. Many authorities believe these thickened or furrowed lesions are well nigh as important as foul and jagged teeth in bringing about the development of cancer. The surface is glistening and may appear to change in color, much like an opal, when viewed in a good light. Lips, tongue and cheeks are commonly affected, particularly in those who smoke excessively. Fortunately we have a means at hand which is usually effective for removal. Treatment includes avoiding all irritating foods and stopping the use of tobacco. The teeth should be maintained in excellent condition.

In older persons, usually those past 60, the skin about the temples, the cheek bones, and on the backs of the hands—in other words, the parts exposed to the weather—often exhibits flat or slightly raised blemishes. These may occur in groups, and vary in size from a pea to a 10-cent piece; in color from yellowish brown to dark gray. Sometimes they will undergo ulceration. In no case should these lesions be allowed to persist for longer than a few weeks without careful examination and proper treatment, particularly if they are increasing in size or have become sore.

May Become Dangerous.

Years ago but little was known about the importance of colored (pigmented) moles. Today we understand how dangerous these affairs may become, particularly if subjected to irritation. The most vicious are the small blue-black or slate colored patches which may be but slightly raised above the surrounding tissue. Sometimes they are very tiny, but from some unknown cause may begin to grow suddenly. Most of them bleed easily when injured, and sometimes they will show fine projections of pigment cells extending into the adjacent normal skin. In such a situation we may be facing the spread of a cancerous tumor. There is a general but perfectly safe rule that moles located in any part of the body where they are subject to pressure, rubbing, or any sort of stimulation, should be removed.

All in all we can say with reasonable certainty that skin cancer is the easiest cured of all forms, but it must be caught before dissemination occurs to deeper structures such as lymph channels or blood vessels. Of course, every blemish is not important, and there may be scores of skin discolorations or slight thickenings of no significance whatsoever. Nevertheless, if one of these areas begins to enlarge in an individual past 50 years of age, common safety demands an investigation.

And Call It Accident

By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN.

IT WAS NOW close to 3 o'clock, and a bend in the high-banked lane brought him onto the wide open grass space below Perranuth castle's outside granite stairway. For the first time there seemed something sinister in the great dark mass flung against the sky, and he reminded himself that terrible deeds of cruelty and darkness had been perpetrated there in the old days.

Then he felt a thrill of delight, for all at once the door at the top of the stone steps opened and revealed the slender, now boyish looking figure of Ruth Starling. She was wearing a pair of riding breeches, and with it a long coat of the same brown tint. Around her neck was knotted loosely a dark blue scarf, and on her head was poised a panama hat bound with a ribbon of the same tint as the scarf. It was a somewhat fantastic costume, and one which would have aroused criticism in Lord John's mind had it been worn by any other young woman than Ruth Starling.

Some way to the left, under one of the ilex trees, stood a groom with the other riding horse.

Ruth ran down the steps, and Lord John was glad, indeed, to postpone what he felt would be a far from pleasant talk with his cousin Philip and with Philip's wife. While he respected Iris for the way she conducted her difficult life with her husband, he definitely did not like her.

As they rode off toward the cliffs Ruth's escort exclaimed: "I have never before seen a lady 'vault into the saddle.' You did exactly that, and very gracefully, too, if you will allow me to say so, Miss Starling."

"I was taught to do that at home." She waited a moment. "I'm afraid Iris was rather shocked I didn't bring with me what she called 'a proper riding habit.'"

"It is much more sensible for a woman to ride astride," he said quickly. "One shudders to think of the dangers that were run by women in the old long riding habit days which are recalled by the early pictures of Queen Victoria, and even of people like my own mother."

Lord John Is Solicitous.

They were trotting now on a rolling down, and suddenly he observed: "I'm afraid you must find life rather dull down here. It's the sort of place where nothing ever happens, does it? Life was very different in the old days at Perranuth castle. There was no lack of adventure then."

Ruth waited a perceptible moment. She had had an adventure since their meeting yesterday, and she longed to tell him about that frightening episode, but her promise to Iris sealed her lips.

And then he asked her another half question which she also found it difficult to answer, and this was the story of the play on which she was building so many hopes. Now in "A Daughter of Heth," an American heiress was beguiled into a big English country house so that she might revive the fortunes of a dissolute young peer. The last act contained her escape from this plot into the arms of a brilliant, devoted young diplomat attached to the American embassy in Paris. Somehow, she did not feel eager to tell the story of her plans to this man, and he saw this was so. But soon they were talking happily together, she feeling fascinated by Lord John's penetrating analysis of the art of acting. They were discussing the kind of things she longed to discuss with Philip Trefane, and never did so, because though he had more than once acted himself, he had a contempt for actors and actresses, and for the art they practiced. To him his connection with the stage had only been of value because it had proved an easy way of making money. The possession of money to such a man was like the air he breathed. He felt not only stifled, but utterly miserable, when "hard up."

Lord John turned his horse about, and when they were about a mile from the castle, he exclaimed, "Miss Starling, I want to say something to you of a rather unconventional nature."

An Overture of Friendship.

She put her gentle mare to a walk and looked at the speaker confidingly. "Why, yes, please do. I don't think anything you say could shock me," and she laughed gayly.

"I am a lonely man," he said gravely, "and I haven't got a woman friend. I wonder if you will be my friend? We seem to have the same kind of interests and tastes, for, like you, I am intensely absorbed in the theater."

He added a moment later: "I suppose the Trefanes told you that at one time I did a good deal of acting?"

He saw by her expression that in so supposing he had guessed right.

"Iris probably told you a good deal more about me, eh?" And then in a low and bitter tone: "I expect she told you that a bad woman who was also an actress had got hold of me and made me spend a lot of money on her. But you mustn't believe that, Miss Starling, for it's a lie. In fact, you will be wise in your dealings with my cousins to take everything they say with a grain of salt; in fact, I shouldn't be going too far to say a mountain of salt."

Her face shadowed.

"Forgive me——" His tone was deeply penitent. "It's beastly to talk like that just when I'm going to break bread in what is now their house! But if we're going to be friends, I'll just have to talk to you frankly."

"I hope you always will!" and then she said impulsively: "I'm truly grateful for your friendship." She hardly knew what made her add: "I had hoped Iris and I would become real friends, but she and Phil are so devotedly attached; indeed, each adores the other so, that there's really no room in either of their lives for any one else."

Defends Helen.

"What dy'ou think of Helen Bates?"

"I only met her this morning for the first time."

"I hope you didn't dislike her; her appearance is very much against her, of course." As if speaking to himself he exclaimed: "I suppose that's one reason I'm sorry for the poor little thing! We're companions in misfortune there."

She felt surprised by those last words, then realized that he was right. Many people would consider this man repulsive. She did not.

"I wish she liked Philip Trefane more than she does," said Ruth.

"More than she does?" He broke into hearty laughter. "Why, she hates him as much as he hates her! In fact, Philip would have got rid of her long ago if it wasn't that, unluckily for Helen, she's got quite a nice little income. Iris and he live on that money when he's out of a job."

Ruth looked at him with wide open eyes of dismay. "I know Helen Bates believes that, but I couldn't believe such a thing possible. D'you think he takes that girl's money and spends it on himself?"

"I'm afraid there's no doubt about it, Miss Starling."

"I have been short of money, but —O!" and then she stopped. She could not conceive of herself under any circumstances living on money held in trust for another human being.

Gives a Warning.

"Well, I've no business to be fouling my own nest, for Philip Trefane is my first cousin. All the same if I were you, I'd be very careful where money is concerned."

He did not dare to say more, but he had not felt that he could say less. The two hours he had just spent with this American girl had sealed his fate, for he knew himself by now to be deeply in love with her. That she should be closely associated, even if only in a business way, with Philip Trefane, was hateful to him. He longed to envelop her with a kind of protective tenderness for which he was ruefully aware few modern young women would feel grateful. Yet she, after all, might be an exception. He sensed she must sometimes feel very lonely.

"I think I ought to tell you."—there had come a constraint and coldness in Ruth's voice that keenly hurt him—"that nothing could be more—well, I can only call it disinterested—than the way your cousin has behaved to me up to now. He wasn't even going to ask me to give him before September anything for preliminary expenses connected with our joint theatrical venture. It was Iris who explained to me that Philip has to be spending out all the time, though just now there is nothing to show for it."

He looked at her wryly. "I am honestly glad that you can give such a good account of him. I daresay I am prejudiced——" he did not feel he could tell her even one of the many reasons he had for distrusting Philip Trefane.

"It's good of you to care about my concerns," she exclaimed, "and I'm grateful to you."

"Will you promise to consult me if at any time you find yourself in any trouble?" he said earnestly.

"Why, of course I will," and she again looked what he called to himself "her divinely kind self."

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

"Mother of Four" Tells in More Detail Her Attitude Toward Parent-Child Relationship.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am sorry that I expressed myself so badly in my letter which was published in your column of June 24. I must have made a sorry business of telling you what I had in mind. I wasn't thinking of the kick I would get out of making my children's dreams come true. If they haven't enough gumption to make their own dreams come true, it's just too bad. I was thinking of the kick I would get out of learning and doing things myself. I didn't graduate from high school. A good many of the subjects my son will need to master are just so much Greek to me.

• • • •

What I had in mind was the fact that during his elementary and high school years he will occasionally need help, not in doing, but in comprehending. I know a dozen children who would be happier in school if they could talk over their studies with their parents. But if I don't know the subject he is discussing, how can I provide the assistance needed?

• • • •

As for the career my son has in mind—of course he'll change his mind half a dozen times. Offhand, I can't think of a friend whose career fulfills a childhood ambition in entirety. But no matter what career he chooses, the studies I mentioned will be of benefit to him.

• • • •

Then there is the little matter of letting children do for themselves. You are right on that score. I believe in the theory and what's more to the point, I practice what I preach. I've never seen the child yet who was helped by having Mama do it. My neighbors think me heartless because I never pick up my baby when she falls, nor sympathize when she's hurt. If iodine and bandages are in order, then iodine and bandages it is, but that ends it.

• • • •

And I never, never say: "Naughty ol' sidewalk. Did it hurt muvver's baby?" She might as well learn as a baby to pick herself up and hold back her tears. She'll have to do these things when she's a woman.

I never, under any circumstances, do anything for my children if I think there is the slightest possibility of their being able to do it for themselves. That would be just as ridiculous as telling them they need exercise to develope their muscles and then doing the exercises myself while they sat down. There is a practical side to this point of view. In a household of six persons, with just one pair of hands (mine) to do all the work—washing, ironing, cooking, scrubbing, cleaning, bed-making, etc., etc., every member of the family has to pull his share of the load (even the year-and-a-half-old baby) unless mother is to become a doormat. Which brings us to the theory that it is all-important for a mother to have interests in life independent of her children's interests and their tentative plans for the future.

• • • •

Any woman who becomes absorbed in her children and their concerns to the exclusion of intelligent self interest, personal ambition and individual effort toward growth is, in my opinion, not only a fool but a failure as a parent. She will end by trying to do her children's thinking for them and when the time comes, as inevitably it must, when they are faced with the necessity of thinking for themselves, they may find their ability to think has atrophied through disuse. And when her children are grown and gone, such a mother will find herself with years ahead and nothing within herself to sustain her. You will not find me making a mistake like that. For one thing, I am fundamentally too selfish ever to let myself be absorbed by another person, no matter how dearly loved. For another, there are so many interesting things in the world I wish to know about that I would be afraid of missing something if I gave too much time and too much thought to my children and their interests.

• • • •

Because, although you are a stranger, I admire you tremendously and value your good opinion, I wish I could make you understand that I don't wish to plan my children's lives; that I don't wish to do for them anything they can do for themselves; that I don't wish to satisfy my suppressed desires by having my children fulfill them. I'd a sight rather they'd fulfill their own suppressed desires and let me take care of my own.

MOTHER OF FOUR.

Begin Study Now.

DEAR MOTHER OF FOUR—It seems, after all, that you and I have much the same attitude of mind concerning what constitutes intelligent acceptance of parental responsibilities. It is most kind of you to write this second letter, and I am sorry not to have sensed the full picture in the first place. Your wish, expressed in your first letter, to keep at least one jump ahead of your children intellectually becomes understandable and praiseworthy. However, if you have never mastered the technicalities of certain studies which they will be called upon to master, it is probable you will never be able to realize your wish in entirety. But you can become a person of pleasingly cultivated mind by beginning now to read and study under wise direction. Whatever your intellectual bent is, follow it. The local public library has a readers' advisory service for guiding patrons in the selection of such books as deal with subjects in which they are interested. Miss Bertie Backus, head of the character education project in District public schools, would no doubt be willing to co-operate with you in working out a program of study at home. Miss Backus can be reached for appointment by telephoning National 6000 and asking to be connected with her office in the Franklin Building. M. H.

Parks Program Begins in Week; Cost, $600,000

$200,000 of Total Becomes Available Wednesday for Area Purchase.

With $200,000, available out of the newly-signed deficiency act to advance its program in the District, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission this week will begin a $600,000 expenditure for parks, playgrounds and recreation centers in Washington.

The first third of the $600,000 will be available after July 1.

Although the money cannot be used for new projects, it will enable the commission to complete the purchase of 10 areas for which it has been negotiating, and to advance development of three others, John Nolen, jr., director of the Commission, said yesterday.

The areas fully acquired will be turned over to the District commissioners and the National Capital Parks for development. The National Capital Park and Planning Commission will participate in this development through the special committee, to which the District Playground Department, the Board of Education, and the National Capital Parks also being.

The new recreation centers are located in all parts of Washington, although the exact locations in keeping with Government policy, have not been disclosed.

Police Rescue Man And His Cat, Poised For 3-Story Jump

The panic which comes with fire nearly drove a cat and a man to a three-story jump and possible death last night.

Firemen from No. 16 Engine and No. 4 Truck companies, responding to a call at 1108 Sixth street northwest, found William Thomas, 35, and his cat on a third floor ledge about to leap.

The firemen persuaded the man to wait while they entered his room from the house. There was little danger. A few furnishings had caught fire when a gas stove exploded.

'One-Man Cars' Are Protested By D. C. Legion

Mass Meeting o Be Held Tonight Against Raise in Trolley Rates.

The District Department of the American Legion yesterday announced its opposition to widespread use of one-man-operated street cars in Washington, while plans for a mass meeting of civic organizations tonight to protest proposed street railway rate increases went forward.

"Because," the resolution read, "the one-man car is known to be much slower and less convenient than two-men equipment . . . be it resolved that the department opposes increase in the number of one-man cars on congested routes."

A copy of the resolution was sent the Public Utilities Commission.

Meanwhile, spokesmen for at least 26 local civic organizations prepared to speak against proposed rate increases. The Capital Transit Co. has petitioned for an increase in street car token fare from 7½ cents to 8 1-3 cents per token. The company also would raise the rate of weekly passes from $1 to $1.25.

The meeting tonight will be held at 8 o'clock in the District Building.

Sale of Tickets For Concerts To Open Today

First Program Is Planned Within Three Weeks at Watergate.

Anticipating an opening concert three weeks from last night, the Washington Summer Concerts Association will open an advance ticket sale today.

While there are to be other tickets priced at 25 cents and 50 cents, the dollar tickets will be offered first, an official of the association announced yesterday. Needing $5,000 to complete arrangements to hold the open-air concerts at the Watergate, the association will push the advance sale this week.

The association also is seeking contributions to swell its sponsors' fund.

Tickets will be on sale at Homer L. Kitt's music store, 1330 G street northwest; the American Automobile Association, Seventeenth and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, and the Concerts Association office, 612 District National Bank Building, 1406 G street northwest.

In conjunction with the ticket sale announcement, Thomas J. Mullikin, chairman of the association, said several of the musicians to hold first chair positions have been engaged. With the exception of the first trumpet player, all the musicians engaged held similar positions with the National Symphony Orchestra last winter, Mullikin added.

2 Stabbed Trying To Stop Quarrel

Two men were stabbed, one seriously, yesterday when they attempted to interfere in an argument, police said, between James N. Fowler, 35, and his wife at 1822 Thirty-fifth street northwest.

Two radio cars were sent to the scene when excited neighbors saw Fowler, armed with a knife, slash two of his neighbors.

Joseph Burke, 32, of 1813 Thirty-fifth street northwest, suffered a cut in his neck and a flesh wound in his chest. William H. Holt, 63, of 1824 Thirty-fifth street, was cut on the hand.

Policeman E. E. Ditto, of the Seventh Precinct, who answered the call, said that Fowler and his wife were quarreling and that the other two men stepped in. Fowler, according to Ditto's report, resented the interference and slashed both men with a pocket knife.

Fowler was taken to the Seventh Precinct and held on a charge of assault. He will be arraigned in Police Court today.

Travelers Aid Locates Jobs For Stranded Man and Wife

"Well, I don't s'pose you can do anything for me, but they told me to come here, and here I am."

The speaker, hardly more than a boy, was addressing Miss Beatrice Hodgson at the Travelers Aid Society. He had come from Georgia a short time before to join his wife. Unsuccessful in finding work and ineligible for relief because of his status as a transient, he had appealed to the Community Chest and had been sent to the Travelers Aid Society.

His wife, still younger, had been the first to break away from the little Georgia town. With their 3-year-old daughter, she had come to Washington and had obtained a place as a maid in a home, where she could not keep the child. Her wages were barely sufficient to provide a home for the little one and there was nothing left to share with her husband.

Communication with the home town of the couple convinced the Travelers Aid Society that it would be inadvisable to send them back. It was a bad case of "in-law" trouble which had grown so intolerable that the girl had been forced to leave.

In another part of the city, at Community Chest headquarters, a woman with a country home was seeking a man and wife as caretakers. She wanted someone on whom she could depend and the application secretary was striving to locate a couple who could give proper references and who were capable of handling the job. Among the agencies called was the Travelers Aid and Miss Hodgson immediately remembered the young man who had been in to see her and with whom she was still in touch.

A telephone call brought the couple and the child to Travelers Aid headquarters, another call sent the woman in search of a caretaker to the same destination, and the first person that the home owner encountered was the little girl.

The two became immediate friends and the little girl was still clinging to her hand as the woman was ushered into Miss Hodgson's office.

"My, what a sweet child," was her first remark, and Miss Hodgson promptly replied, "That is the little girl whose parents are going to take care of your country home."

Witnin an hour they were on their way. References were satisfactory, the job was made to order for the young couple, and the little girl has a wonderful playground and every opportunity to develop into a strong, sturdy child.

Roper Lauds The Gideons; Bibles Given

Commerce Secretary Is Speaker at Willard Ceremonies.

Church Group Donates 2,000 Volumes to Capital Hotels.

Declaring the Bible the "greatest research book in the world," Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper yesterday congratulated the international organization of Gideons on the thousands of Bibles it has placed in hotel rooms.

Secretary Roper spoke at an afternoon service in the Willard Hotel. The Gideons, as one feature of the program, presented 2,000 Bibles to the Washington Hotel Men's Association for distribution to rooms in hotels here.

Samuel A. Fulton, Milwaukee, Wis., manufacturer and international chaplain of the Gideons, presented the Bibles, and Edward W. Martin, president of the Hotel Men's Association, received them. One hundred and forty-five of the Bibles will go to Sibley Hospital.

Compared to Biblical Daniel.

Ira Trimble Champion, secretary-treasurer of the District of Columbia Camp of Gideons, introduced Secretary Roper, comparing the Cabinet officer to "Daniel of old, who found strength in the Bible to fend off the lions."

Roper, who recalled having learned his alphabet by observing the capital at the beginning of each chapter in the family Bible, said the greatest economic difficulty today is that business is carried on too often "without the light of truth."

He pointed out that those countries of the New World founded by men and women seeking religious freedom to worship God had far outdistanced, commercially, those founded by men "seeking gold."

Urges Faith In God.

He asked the Gideons to continue efforts to bring men together through "the common virtues of life, and faith in the great source of all things—God."

"The great fear, among thinking men, is that we are all losing faith in each other," said the Secretary.

He warned that only by overcoming this fear can man meet "the great problem of sympathetic, equitable distribution of life's products."

"Any one who studies the Bible will never get lost," he said.

Fulton, who has been working with the Gideons for 33 years, several of which he has spent as their president, said there was ample evidence that the Bibles placed in the hotel rooms are read.

Evidence of Reading.

"One hotel manager told us that his electric light bill went up noticeably after we had placed Bibles in the rooms of his hotel.

"But I don't think he objected to that. Other hotel managers have told us they considered a Bible in every room of their establishment a greater asset than a policeman on every corner.

"I believe this book (the Bible) is the best business manual in the world."

The visiting Gideons, nearly 30 in number, who came here for the Bible presentation exercises, spoke in Protestant churches throughout the city yesterday morning and last night.

Twice the Usual Number at Sunday School Appear at Outdoor Affair; Romp and Play and Sing American Songs.

Children evidently are the same, no matter what their nationality. The usual Sunday afternoon service of the Chinese Community Church draws a maximum of 25 boys and girls. Yesterday, when the church had a meeting in Rock Creek park, followed by a picnic, 50 boys and girls showed up.

It was the first outdoor gathering the group had ever held and the children were determined to get the most out of it. The moment they reached a shady section of the park near the Shoreham Hotel they dashed for the swings. From the swings they went to a slide and from the slide to teeter boards. Then they went back to the swings and began the circuit all over again.

No games or contests had been planned. The Chinese youngsters visit the park so seldom that they were thrilled with things as they were. They needed no entertainment aside from the freedom to run and play on soft grass beneath spreading trees.

Dr. C. C. Hung, pastor of the Chinese Community Church, and his wife, who arranged the picnic, made no attempt yesterday to hold regular Sunday school classes as they are held at the usual Sunday afternoon service in the Mount Vernon Methodist Church South, Massachusetts avenue and Ninth street northwest.

When the children became a little weary from play they were called together and, while their parents sat near them, Dr. Hung read a scripture lesson. Then they all sang typical American Sunday school songs.

Pan-American Concert Is Set For Thursday

Senorita Colomo Will Sing in Aztec Gardens; Army Band to Play.

Latin-American songs by Senorita Rosalmira Colomo and dances by Christine Stewart will feature the second outdoor concert in the Aztec gardens of the Pan-American Union Thursday at 9 p. m. Dr. L. S. Rowe, director general, will be host.

The instrumental portion of the concert will be played by the United States Army Band under the leadership of Capt. Thomas F. Darcy. He has selected a variety of Latin-American compositions and will present a number of instrumental solos by members of the band.

Senorita Colomo, a contralto, was born in Mexico City. She received her musical training in this country and is now a resident of Washington. She has been guest soloist with the Army Band on a series of radio programs.

Miss Stewart, who will interpret several Latin-American dances, studied for a number of years under Lisa Gardiner here and with Pericet in Spain, specializing in Spanish dances.

50 Hoodlums Are Arrested In D. C. Raids

Poolrooms and Beer Gardens Are Invaded by Detectives.

Victims of Robberies to View Suspects Tonight in Police 'Line-up.'

Striking in the early hours of morning, robbery and pick-up squad detectives yesterday seized more than 50 "undesirable and known police characters," both men and women, in a series of raids that swept poolrooms and beer gardens throughout the city.

Taken to police headquarters, all of those arrested were fingerprinted and photographed. Their pictures were placed in the Rogue's Gallery and their fingerprints sent to the Department of Justice.

Many of those arrested have long police records. Detective Bureau files also showed that more than half of the men were taken in similair raids here several months ago.

Ammunition Is Found.

The majority are boys and young men ranging in ages from 18 to 25. In the home of one youth a revolver and nearly 100 rounds of ammunition were found. Another had a billiard ball wrapped in cloth to be used as a blackjack.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, said the hoodlums are suspected of having committed more than 100 holdups and strong-arm robberies during the last six months.

Most of the men are dangerous criminals, Inspector Thompson said. All will face a police "line-up" at headquarters tonight.

Victims Are Notified.

Thompson said notices have been sent to all persons who have been the victims of armed bandits and footpads asking them to be present to view the suspects in an effort to identify their assailants.

After the "line-up" those who have not been identified and who are not under suspicion in other crimes will be released.

"Bringing this type of person in has a psychological effect," Thompson stated. "The hardened criminal will leave town while the others will stop frequenting these hangouts."

Nats Rally, Beat Chicago 12-9in 10-Inning Opener, Drop 2d, 4-1

Griffs Shoved Back Into 5th Place

Bluege Hero of Opener, Is Spearhead of Rally That Wins Game.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Chicago, June 28.—The Nats beat the White Sox, 12 to 9, early this afternoon to move into undisputed possession of third place for a few hours, but they moved right out again later in the day when they lost the second game of the double-header, 4 to 1.

In fact, the Nats moved all the way down to fifth place as the Indians and Tigers, with whom they had figured in a three-way tie for third, overtook them on the impetus of victories over their respective rivals of the day.

It was a pair of stirring ball games that the 25,000 Chicago fans witnessed, with the Nats producing some prolific slugging in the late innings of the first game to win it in the tenth inning and thereby offset some sickly pitching by Buck Newsom, who was giving the runs back to the White Sox faster than the Nats scored 'em.

Bluege Is Hero.

Ossie Bluege was the hero of that opening game when the Nats scored three runs in each of the eighth, ninth and tenth innings to wipe out White Sox leads. Bluege figured in three runs when he doubled in the eighth and in the ninth after the Nats had been given a reprieve by Radcliff's muff on Stone's fly at a time when two were out. Bluege rapped out a single that scored the two tying runs.

The denouement for the Sox occurred in the tenth when, in rapid succession, with two out, Buddy Lewis doubled, Kuhel singled to score him, and Johnny Stone lifted a long home run into the rightfield bleachers.

Joe Cascarella, unluckiest of the Nats' pitchers, lost a superbly pitched duel to Merirtt Cain in that second game. Cascarella, and Pete Appleton, who relieved him in the eighth inning, held the White Sox to four hits, but a tainted double by Larry Rosenthal figured in two Sox runs.

Chapman Gets Homer.

But the Nats were a helpless crew against Cain. After Ben Chapman's first-inning home run, Cain shut 'em out, and turned in a six-hit performance.

The Sox got that run back against Cascarella in the first inning without the aid of a hit. Radcliff was safe on Kress' fumble, went to second on a pass to Rosenthal, took third on Millies' wild throw to first in the catcher's attempt to trap Rosenthal off the base, and scored while Kreevich was in the act of hitting into a double play.

Making but two hits, the Sox scored twice more in the third. Cain walked and Radcliff doubled to right. Both runs scored when Rosenthal looped a tainted double over Lewis' head behind third.

Rosenthal's home run into the right field bleachers in the seventh was well hit but superfluous, inasmuch as Johnny Stone's double in the ninth was the lone Washington hit after the fourth inning.

That first game was a dismal affair for the Nats until the late innings. While Vernon Kennedy was shutting 'em out with two hits in the first five innings, Newsom had set the Sox up in a 4-0 lead. That was done very simply. Newsom walked three straight batters in the second inning, forcing over two of the runs, and then with the bases

Bolton Suffers Bad Thumb Injury

X-Ray Pictures to Be Taken Here Today; Catcher May Be Out Month.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Chicago, June 28.—The Nats entrained for Washington tonight haunted by the fear that Cliff Bolton, their No. 1 catcher, may be forced out of the line-up for at least a month with a possible fractured thumb on his throwing hand.

Bolton's thumb was severely jammed when it came in contact with one of Earl Whitehill's pitches in the seventh inning of yesterday's game, but he stayed in the line-up despite the pain of the injury. Overnight the digit stiffened to such a degree that he was unable to hold a ball.

X-ray pictures of the thumb will be taken in the Capital tomorrow before the Nats entrain for Philadelphia for a four-game series with the Athletes.

Fighting for third place with a chance to overtake the second-place Red Sox, the Nats will miss the power in Bolton's bat. In Walter Millies they have a capable substitute in handling the pitchers, but Millies is far shy of Bolton's run-producing power.

The Nats today concluded their most profitable road trip in two seasons. In the 13 games played on the road they have a record of eight victories and five defeats.

Welsh Captures Middle States Net Crown

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Pittsbugh, Pa., June 28.—By virtue of a determined comeback which enabled him to sweep the last three sets, Barney Welsh, of Washington, National Public Park tennis champion, captured the men's singles title in the annual Middle-States Grass Court tournament today.

The tall, lean lad from the Capital city overcame Arthur Hendrix, top-seeded star from Lakeland, Fla., by 3—6, 4—6, 8—6, 7—5, 6—1.

It was a gruelling battle which required some two hours and 40 minutes before the decision was reached. Hendrix was off to a brilliant start and seemed a certain winner even after dropping the third set. Soon after the intermission however, Welsh began spurting and at the finish had the Floridian completely routed, as the lopsided set score indicates.

Welsh reached the final bracket on Saturday with a 6—4, 0—6, 6—4, 6—4 win over Guy Cheng, of Tulane University.

Trans-Mississippi Crown to Dawson

Wichita, Kans., June 28.—Johnny Dawson, cool-headed golfer from Chicago, won the transmississippi golf championship today by defeating George Matson, Husky Wichita "dark horse," three and two.

Dawson won a title which he long has coveted. Twice he fell just short and had to be content as runner-up. He won today by becoming the first man this week to match Matson's spectacular subpar playing and it was the brawny Wichitan who was first to slip.

Matson eliminated all his rivals, including Defending Champion Johnny Goodman yesterday, by firing such spectacular golf at them that they never could remain abreast of him.

Mrs. Wingard Wins 3 Swim Crowns

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 28.—The open season on sports champions can't catch up with the swimming matron from Homestead, Pa., Mrs. Lenore Kight Wingard.

As the husky swimming star pulled herself out of the salt water of Oriental Pool at Manhattal Beach today, she emerged with her third straight women's national A. A. U. outdoor championship for the third year in a row to clearly win individual honors in a meet otherwise featured by dazzling upsets.

Mrs. Wingard successively defended and regained her titles in the 1 mile, 440-yard and 880-yard free style events, soundly whipping her rivals in each race and lowering her own world's record by 12.8 seconds by skimming over the 1-mile route in the fast time of 24:07.2.

Today, before a throng of 3,000 spectators, Mrs. Wingard simply toyed with her field as she regained her championship in the gruelling 880. Clipping records for odd distances as she sped along, she drew away to a long lead, relaxed and then came home with 25 yards to spare over her closest rival, Katy Rawls, of Miami Beach, in 11:38.6, or 4.6 seconds slower than her own American mark. Mary Lou Petty, of Seattle, who gave Miss Rawls a fight for second place and then wilted, finished third.

Team honors returned to the Women's Swimming Association of New York for the first time since 1929 as the W. S. A. swept the boards in the 300 meters medley relay championship, only other event on the closing program. The W. S. A. won the first three places to pile up a high team total of 41 points for the three days as against 17 each for the Washington A. C. of Seattle and the Carnegie Library Club, which tied for second. Mrs. Wingard scored 15 of her club's points.

Mrs. Jarrett Breaks Mark.

Mrs. Eleanor Holm Jarrett, the night club singing veteran who seems to get better with every race, blazed the watery trail over which the Women's Swimming Association "B" team smashed the American record of 4:09.3 to win the 300 meters medley relay. Mrs. Jarrett, also winner of the 220-yard backstroke yesterday, churned the waters of the backstroke section of today's medley in 1:18.7 for 110 yards as against the American record of 1:21.3 held by Alice Bridges, of Uxbridge, Mass. Her fast pace gave her teammates, Elsie Petri and Mavis Freeman, such a lead that they couldn't lose. The W. S. A. "A" team, Erna Kompa, Judith Fowler and Dorothy Dickinson, finished second.

Two school girls, Olomay (Toni) Redfern, of New York, and Iris Cummings, Los Angeles, were the two big surprise packages of the meet. Miss Redfern, who couldn't swim more than 20 yards last summer, won the 100-meter free style. Miss Cummings, swimming but three years, upset Miss Rawls to capture the 220-yard breast stroke.

7 Bermuda Race Stragglers Finish

By the Associated Press.

Hamilton, Bermuda, June 28.—Stragglers sailing in from the Newport, R. I.-to-Bermuda ocean yacht race failed today to dislodge the inexperienced sloop Kirawan and its two closest rivals from the first three places in the stormy 635-mile test.

Of seven overnight arrivals, only the Sirocco, owned by Roger Robinson of New Haven, Conn., joined the leaders, dislodging the Edlu of R. J. Schaeffer of Larchmont, N. Y., from sixth place with a corrected time of 4 days 23 hours 42 minutes and 47 seconds.

Valtimore Gives Fans Money's Worth, 31-9

Baltimore, June 28 (AP).—Those rabid baseball fans who are always yelling for the local team to hit got their money's worth today when Baltimore's International League team beat Syracuse, 31 to 9.

The Orioles rapped out 26 hits, including six home runs, during the first game of a double-header. The contest lasted 2 hours and 55 minutes. Every Oriole but one got two hits or more.

Walter Hagen, Laffoon Win Golf Play

Mangrum, Wood Second in Inverness 4-Ball Team Tourney.

By the Associated Press.

Toledo, Ohio, June 28.—Walter Hagen, master showman of them all, and young Ky Laffoon, of Chicago, won the Inverness four-ball team play tourney today, staving off a last-minute drive by Ray Mangrum, lanky lad from Dayton, Ohio, and Craig Wood, the blond bomber from Deal, N. J.

Mangrum and Wood clicked into second place, with Light Horse Harry Cooper and Horton Smith finishing third. First place was worth $1,000 to Hagen and Laffoon, and they added another $100 for the low best-ball score, nine under par 62.

During the seven 18-hole rounds the 16 professionals tore this historic course apart, scoring 303 birdies and three eagles.

Hagen and Laffoon were 43 under par for the 126 holes, a mark bettered only by Mangrum and Wood, who clipped 45 strokes off even figures. Tommy Armour, of Chicaco, and Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, Va., who finished next to last, were 23 under par for the route.

The final standings and prizes each team won in the second annual classic were: Hagen and Laffoon, plus 13, $1,100; Mangrum and Wood, plus 11, $800; Smith and Cooper, plus 9, $700; Denny Shute and Vic Ghezzi, even, $600; Henry Picard and Johnny Revolta, minus 3, $500; Lawson Little and Jimmy Thompson, minus 7, $400; Armour and Cruickshank, minus 11, $300; Jimmy Hines and Willie Klein, minus 12, $200.

Hagen staged one of the greatest performances of his career in carrying the greater part of the victory load. The veteran crashed through with 28 birdies and an eagle on the 126 holes, the eagle coming on the ninth hole today when Mangrum and Wood had Hagen and Laffoon four down and had evened the tournament at that point.

Sutter Is Victor In College Net Tourney

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 28.—Ernest Sutter, 19-year-old Tulane University junior, won the national intercollegiate tennis singles championship at Northwestern University today with a smashing straight-set victory over Vernon John of Southern California, 6—4, 6—4, 6—4.

Ben Dey and William Seward, of Stanford, defeated Norman Bickel and Norbert Burgess, of Chicago, Western Conference titleholders, for the doubles crown.

The Tulane sharpshooter won the same title his brother, Clifford, earned in 1930 and 1932, and it marked the first time in the 52-year history of the tournament that two members of the same family have taken the championship.

Fans Cry "Foul" As New Guzzling King Is Crowned

By the Associated Press.

Milwaukee, June 28.—Amid outcries of "foul" from the rival camp, Raymond Du Val, a 100-pound husky from Geen Bay, Wis., today claimed the world's championship for fast, full-fraught and fluent beer drinking.

Verettes' followers raised the hue and cry of "foul" after an outburst by Du Vals' manager, Leo Fox, during the heat in which the dethroned champion was competing.

As Verette poured it down, a spray of suds cascaded from the edge of the tin pail. Fearing that Verette was not complying with regulations demanding that all beer be deposited inside the contestants, Fox shouted:

"Hey, there"

The red-haired champion paused. The stream of brew was checked on its gargantauan way. For a moment Verette was breathless, then he resumed his drinking.

Outboard Team Title Won by Dartmouth

Yale Second, Duke Third; Rowland, W. & M., Sets Class B Mark.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., June 28.—Dartmouth's five-man team won the National Intercollegiate Outboard championship in the seventh annual regatta on the James River course here today, with Yale second and Duke third.

Paul B. Sawyer, jr., of Yale, captured individual honros, with 2,350 points as compared with 2,027 scored by Al Deemer, of Duke, and 1,741 by Crawford Ferguson, of Dartmouth.

One national and one Eastern intercollegiate record fell despite the handicap of choppy waters and a strong cross wind. Bob Rowland, of William and Mary, roared across the finish line in the third heat for class B motors with an average speed of 43.227 miles per hour for the 5-mile distance, exceeding by .225 the mark established at Worcester, Mass., in 1935 by Bedford Davie, of Yale.

Miss Mary Sterlin Tyson, of Bradford Junior College, Mass., daughter of James S. Y. Tyson, surveyor for the American Power Boat Association, set a new Eastern Intercollegiate Outboard Association mark for midget motors when she sped over a 3½-mile distance at an average speed of 28.036.

The crowd of 3,000 persons, most of whom were witnessing their first speedboat races, were given an added thrill when Gar Wood, sr., famous Michigan driver, piloted a midget boat to victory in a "proud papa's" event.

Also competing in this race were Tyson, who finished second; Stanley W. Ferguson, of Boston, third, and James Mullen, of Richmond, who did not complete the five-sixth-mile run. Mullen was chairman of the local committee in charge of the regatta, while Ferguson is a well-known racing enthusiast. Each had sons entered in the meet.

Browns, Yanks Divide Pair Of Games

St. Louis Wins First, 6 to 3, Drop Second Tilt by 7 to 4 Score.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, June 28.—Battered around at their own game of knocking home runs, the league leading New York Yankees dropped the opener of a double-header, 6 to 3, to the Browns today, but came out of the second game on the long end of a 7-to-4 score.

Home runs were accountable for all of the Brownie scores in the first game. Roy Bell tied the count at 1-all in the fourth with a homer and then after the Yanks threatened in the seventh the Hornsbymen opened the fireworks. A pair of singles and a walk filled the bases which were immediately cleaned by Julius Soulters, who doplicated Bell's drive to the leftfield bleachers. Jim Bottomley followed with one atop the pavilion roof as John Broaca gave way to Southpaw Kleinhans who got the next three in order.

Cubs Shutout Giants Twice, Take Lead

French, Lee Do Superb Work to Win by 3-0 and 6-0 Score.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 28.—The Chicago Cubs shot into first place in the National League today by turning in a pair of shutouts over the Giants in a double-header, by the pitching performances of Larry French and Bill Lee.

With the St. Louis Cardinals losing in Brooklyn to sink out of first place, French bested Carl Hubbell in a pitching duel in the opener, 3 to 0, while Lee limited the New Yorkers to seven hits for a 6-to-0 triumph in the nightcap, and the Cubs were at the top of the heap again for the first time since May 8.

The defeats marked the fourth and fifth shutouts for the Giants this season, and the 18 innings without a run was their longest scoreless stretch of the year.

Frank Demaree's bat was nearly as effective in the opener, as was Hartnett's. He had a triple and single, driving in two of the Cubs' three runs.

By John R. Vosburgh.

Big Cliff Keyser clubbed out a stinging single to leftfield yesterday about 4:30 p. m. on the South Ellipse and automatically wrought a one-man revolution in the National City, Section A, championship race of the Post Sandlot Association.

Eddie Fitzpatrick scored from second to give the Blue Flame Valets a 5-to-4 victory over the Heurich Brewers as one immediate result and the Shady Grove Barbecuers immediately slipped into the first half championship as another. The Barbecuers had just finished swamping Plaza Wine 13 to 3 on West Potomac Park.

A crowd of at least 3,000 sandlot addicts were on hand when Keyser, crack catcher of the Blue Flames, stepped to the plate with the Valets and the Brewers tied at 4-to-4 in the eighth inning. Fitzpatrick was reposing on second as the result of a double to left.

He didn't repose long, however, for Keyser, former All-High catcher for Central High, lost no time in pounding out his third hit of the game. Incidentally, Keyser drove in two runs and scored two himself.

The Brewers made a valiant effort to get at least a tie with Shady Grove for the league lead in the ninth. Lefty Scrivener, pinch-hitting for Pitcher Boy Lyons, singled to left and Otts Zahn walked. With the winning run on base, Dick Knight forced Scrivener at third and Everet Russell grounded to Eddie Cinotti to force Knight at second.

Zahn was on third by this time but Ralph Bennie fled to Fitzpatrick for the last out and Shady Grove had the first half title, won last year by the Blue Flames. It was the second league defeat for the Brewers, who hold the first half championship of the Industrial League and the week-day Post Association 1935 title. It was the first time the Blue Flames, Sunday champs of the city, and the Brewers have met.

The seven-hit pitching of Giggles Adair carried Shady Grove to its easy victory. Adair also hit a home run in the sixth inning with the bases full. The Barbecuers pounded out 21 hits. Manager Eddie Dove, popular and peppy little third baseman for Shady Grove, was missing from the line-up. Dove broke his ankle in Shady Grove's night game with Ballston Friday, sliding into home plate with his club leading 8-0, and is confined to Georgetown Hospital.

Otts Zahn, Heurich Brewers' second baseman, has just hit a pop fly into the blue of the sky at the South Ellipse in a game with the Blue Flames yesterday. Olympic Spots Won by Knight, John Long

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 28.—Before a large crowd the finals of the Olympic canoe tests were held today in connection with the annual regatta on the Schuylkill River.

Ernie Riedel, of the Pendleton Canoe Club of New York, easily placed first in the one and two-man tests of 1,000 meters for double blades.

Riedel easily won the two-man test with a clubmate, Burr Folks. His margin of victory in the one-man event was more than 35 yards.

Harry Knight and John Long, of Washington, D. C., won the right to represent America at Berlin by taking second place in the event won by Riedel and Folks.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Chicago, June 28.

The fans of the Nation have spoken and at Boston on July 7, the peepul's choices will take the field in the annual big league all-star game. Two million of the masses have cast their ballots and there can be no public quarrel with the lineups of the American and National League teams as they will lbe constituted at Braves Field.

This, evidently, is the season for mandates, and the will of the people now is imposed upon Managers Joe McCarthy, of the American Leaguers, and Manager Charley Grimm, of the National. ixteen of each teams' 21 players have been nominated by popular choice. Each manager is entitled to name the additional five players of his own choosing. But the main fibre of the teams has been chosen by the public.

t is happily within the power of Manager Joe McCarthy, though, to rectify what appears to be an inexcusable oversight by Johnny Q. Public. Among his five individual choices for the American League, McCarthy has room to draft for the American League team Mr. Leon Goose Goslin, of the Tigers, whom the fans have shamefully overlooked in their balloting.

If there is any individual who deserves a place on the American League team in the light of his talents, it is the 34-year-old former Wild Goose of the Potomac. In an outfield to which they named Ben Chapman, Joe Dimaggio, Earl Averill, George Selkirk, and Rip Radcliffe, the fans strangely found no place for Goslin, despite the official statistics.

Goslin, with his .332 average is batting 20 points higher than Selkirk and 30 points better than Chapman. Most recent figures show him only one point in the rear of Averill. But not a man named to the American League outfield deserves mention in the same inhalation with Goslin as a money player or run producer.

The Goose has not slowed to any great extent despite his advancing years. His bat this season produced the third greatest total of runs credited to any individual and he is, in fact, only three runs shy of leading the league in this respect. But ont only the figures, but sentiment argues for the choice of Goslin on the team. Here is one of the admittedly great players of the game who has never been chosen on an all-star team, who undoubtedly yearns for the honor, who, in his time has led all the league's hitters and who, moreover, produced the winning hit in the World Series of last year.

The two teams as the fans have chosen them appear to be something o fan even match. With Dizzy Dean, Carl Hubbell, Van Mungo and Lon Warnek named as the Nationals' pitchers, that league appears to have a definite hurling edge when the records of Lefty Grove, Lefty Gomez. Monte Pearson and Schoolboy Rowe, the American's pitchers, are surveyed.

But the batting edge appears to be defintiely with the American Leaguers who can present the .400-hitting Lou Gehrig at first base, .372-hitting Luke Appleton at shortstop, the .351-hitting Charley Gehringher at second base, the .372-hitting Bill Dickey behind the bat, and the .350-hitting Joe DiMaggio, the .375-hitting Rip Radcliffe and the .333-hitting Earl Averill in the outfield.

Blair Is Favored to Defeat Dublinsky in Fight Tonight

Stadium Bout Slated to Go 10 Rounds

Blair Is Clever, Flashy Boxer; Foe Is Rugged, Wading-in Slugger.

Frankie Blair, the only man in the ring to twice defeat District Welterweight Champion Phil Furr, will face a fighter who has given Philip no little trouble when he squares off against Harry Dublinsky at Griffith Stadium tonight.

The Blair-Dublinsky quarrel is slated to go ten rounds, but many close observers of affairs fistic believe it will end in a knockout before that number of rounds has been fought.

Blair rules a slight favorite by virtue of his two defeats of Furr, who was held to a draw by Dublinsky. Prevailing wagering odds have Frankie on the short end of 5-to-6 odds, with indications that he may be an even greater favorite by ring time.

Blair arrived in Washington yesterday from his New Jersey home and immediately hied himself to a gymnasium for a final workout. The workout was not ordered because he was not in shape, but to help him in making 147 pounds—the weight required by the fight articles.

Blair Good Prospect.

After his labors in the gymnasium, Blair scaled in at 147½ pounds. He expects to go well under the required weight after drying out and probably will record about 145 or 146 pounds at the official testing of tonnage this afternoon.

Dublinsky, who has been on the scene of action for several days, weighed 143 pounds yesterday, indicating that he will give away about 4 or 5 pounds in the ring.

The bout will be a clash between a clever, flashy boxer with a good left hand—which is Dublinsky—and a reckless, rugged individual who wades in spitting a fire of lethal larrups from both hands.

POST PREDICTIONS.

Bouts are rated from A (very good, Goldie) to G (what's this?).

MAIN EVENT—Harry Dublinsky, Chicago, vs. Frankie Blair, Camden, N. J., welterweights, 10 rounds. Rated B. This should be the best welterweight bout Washington has seen. Both boys are willing and their styles tend to make a good fight against each other. Blair throws just a few too many punches for Harry, but the Chicago lad should be in there giving a very good account of himself from bell to bell. Blair by decision—possibly a split decision.

PRELIMINARIES—Jackie Carter, Lancaster, vs. Bill Temes, Washington, featherweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Carter did it once—and should repeat.

Jumbo Riviero, New Orleans, vs. Lew Raymond, Baltimore, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Riviero seems here highly touted. If he lives up to his advance notices, he should defeat Raymond.

20,000 Watch Tribe Chase Three Boston Hurlers in 11-3 Victory.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 28.—The Cleveland Indians bombarded three Boston pitchers today to score their third straight victory over the Red Sox, 11 to 3. Twenty thousand fans attended.

George Blaeholder went the route for the Tribe, limiting Boston to seven hits, two of them home runs by Johnny Marcum and Jimmie Foxx.

Foxx, who struck out four times in yesterday's game, got his circuit blow in the ninth inning today with none on. It was his twenty-second of the season. Marcum connected in the eighth, also with no one on.

The Indians had their biggest inning in the seventh when they sent seven runs across the plate and chased Jack Russell to the showers. Marcum, who replaced him, allowed three hits during the remainder of the game.

The victory was the Indians' second top-heavy victory over the second-place Red Sox, following yesterday's 14-to-5 rout.

Italy Expecting Only 1 Nation To Uphold Bans

Forecasts South Africa Will Be Lone League Power Asking Continuance.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, June 28.—Italian officials took stock today of the line-up of nations attending the meeting of the assembly of the League of Nations Tuesday and asserted sanctions would be buried almost unanimously.

Some of the nations, however, it was conceded, may say harsh words before casting their vote against continuation of the economic penalties.

As for recognition of Italy's new empire in Africa, there was little hope it would be granted. A person close to the government said: "Nine-tenths of the nations are in favor of lifting sanctions and nine-tenths are against recognizing the empire."

It was expected here that no decision about recognition would be made and the question would be postponed until September. News that Poland already has lifted sanctions was received with elation.

Line-Up of Nations.

The following line-up of nations and their probable action, from the Italian viewpoint, was prepared on the basis of statements by well-informed persons or leading Italian newspapers.

Britain—"Mr. Eden finds in the attitude of the dominions Australia, Canada and New Zealand, with the exception of South Africa, an excellent support for the necessary change in his policy."

France—"Will not take the initiative, but will follow the attitude of England."

Switzerland—"Reaffirms the necessity of abrogating sanctions. Once more Switzerland's realism renders a service to Europe."

Czechoslovakia — "Follows Yugoslavia on the same road."

No Foundation for Alarm.

Norway—"Has held out a hand to Italy."

Latin-American countries—"Some of the most courageous protests against sanctions have been raised there. Chile, Ecuador, Uruguay and Panama are worthy of special mention."

"Save League" Slogan.

Geneva, June 28 (AP).—The assembly of the League of Nations meets Tuesday with its slogan "Save the League."

Members openly conceded the international body has been sorely stricken by its failure to prevent Italy's swift conquest of Ethiopia.

Leon Blum, Socialist premier of France, entered upon the Geneva stage for the first time last week. He contends the League is not dead and the great moral forces it represents are still in power for world peace.

Undoubtedly steps will be taken by the assembly toward the lifting of sanctions. Nations generally subscribe to the expressed belief of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin of Great Britain that sanctions have failed and could only be made effective by waging war upon Italy.

N.C. Tornado Levels 2 Big Warehouses

Warrenton, N. C., June 28 (AP).—A tornado dipped into the Warrenton business district this afternoon, demolished two large warehouses and unroofed several other buildings.

There were no casualties.

The damage was estimated at around $50,000.

A large tobacco warehouse and a large cotton warehouse were the only buildings demolished. A grocery store was unroofed, and several dwellings were damaged by wind or falling trees.

The twister hit at 3 p. m.

Hudson Awaits Election to Post In League Court

International Law Expert Is Expected to Replace Frank Kellogg.

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, June 28.—The League of Nations was expected today to elect Dr. Manley O. Hudson, American writer and legal expert, to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

The 50-year-old professor of international law at Harvard, Missouri-born, is widely known through his writings and lectures in addition to various posts he has held.

Prof. Hudson probably will be elected by the League Assembly and Council to fill the vacancy in the court caused by the resignation of Frank B. Kellogg, former Secretary of State of the United States.

Moore First U. S. Judge.

The United States, although not a member of the League, always has had a judge on the World Court bench. The first was John Bassett Moore, the second was Charles Evans Hughes, now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and the third was Kellogg.

The World Court, as now constituted, has 15 judges.

Their president is Sir Cecil Hurst, of England. It was established at the same time as the League of Nations and by virtue of the League Covenant.

The court is competent to hear and to decide any dispute of an international character which Nations may submit to it. It may also give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the League Council or Assembly.

Recognized by 40.

1. The interpretation of a treaty;
2. Any question of international law;
3. The existence of any pact which, if established, would constitute breach of an international obligation;
4. The reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

From 1922 to 1935, the court received 64 cases. It handed down 32 judgments and 27 advisory opinions.

Soviet Surpasses U. S. In Gold Production

Moscow, June 28 (AP).—Gold production in the Soviet Union increased by 25 per cent in the first half of 1936, as compared to the first six months of 1935, it was announced today.

This broke all Soviet production records, A. P. Serebrovsky, manager of the government gold trust, announced. Credit for the increase was laid to the development of the Stakhanoff movement (to increase the individual production of workers).

The Soviet Union claimed it rose to second place in world gold output last year, outstripping the United States. The program calls now for the surpassing of South America, holding first place.

Meighan Improving.

Riviera Hotels Close in Reply To Week Strike

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 28.—The first mass retaliation against striking workers in France was taken today by Riviera hotel owners who proclaimed a lockout of 450 establishments.

They announced they were closing the hotels "indefinitely" because of inability to meet workers' demands for higher wages and shorter hours despite the government's attempt at arbitration.

The workers struck a week ago but the hotels remained open for such guests as wished to make their own beds and find their meals elsewhere.

Chambers of commerce protested the closing of the hotels would send many hundreds of foreign tourists to the Italian Riviera with a heavy loss in trade on the French seacoast.

Monaco Bans Strike.

Monte Carlo hotels remained open. Authorities declared that strikes and lockouts were "unconstitutional" in the principality of Monaco, in which the city is located.

Two new political parties entered the conflict between the right and left.

Col. Francois de la Rocque put the finishing touches to his new French "Social Party," the legal successor to his dissolved Croix de Feu, a nationalistic organization of World War veterans.

Seek to Negotiate.

Government representatives attempted to arbitrate the three most serious remaining strikes—bookies in Paris, naval shipyard workers at St. Nazire and iron and steel workers in the Lorraine region.

Pari-mutuel offices in Paris were closed for the second day, but the strike did not interfere with the Grand Prix. Bets were accepted at the course and the provincial betting service was normal.

Several rightists and leftists were wounded in clashes at Toulouse.

Quezon Is Improved; Returns to Manila

Manila, June 28 (AP).—President Manuel Quezon was reported much improved tonight after being returned to Manilla from Cebu, where he was suddenly stricken with an illness diagnosed as angina pectoris.

Dr. Manuel Canazares, the President's personal physician, said Quezon still had a little temperature, but that barring complications he should recuperate in three or four days.

Selassie Planning Return to 'Front'

Geneva, June 28 (AP).—The fugitive Emperor Haile Selassie is planning tentatively to return to Western Ethiopia to organize resistance against Italian forces in East Africa immediately after the League assembly adjourns, it was learned tonight.

Persons close to the vanquished Lion of Judea said the Negus will make a personal appearance before the assembly and plead the Ethiopian cause and that the Negus will demand financial assistance from the League to carry on his proposed military campaign against Italy.

The assembly meets Tuesday to lift anti-Italian sanctions imposed last October when Italy was branded the aggressor against Emperor Haile Selassie's 2,000-year-old kingdom.

Italian military occupation of the country has not yet been extended into the Western and Southwestern provinces, where, the Negus claims, a legitimate government has been established and armed forces still exist.

Head, Hands of a Man Found in Box by Boys

Carrollton, Ky., June 28 (AP).—Two boys found the head and hands of a man in a concrete-tamped box while swimming in a lake here today. Sheriff Walton Banks summoned detectives from Louisville and Cincinnati. He believed the head and hands to belong to the mutilated body found under a Shelby County culvert two weeks ago.

The head appeared that of a man about 60 years old, with gray hair and gold-filled teeth. The remains had been placed in a small box and packed with concrete. James Banta and Arthur Hart, both 19, came on the box while diving in 10 feet of water in Butler Memorial Lake here.

Pius, 80, Visits Predecessors' Tombs in Rome

By the Associated Press

Vatican City, June 28.—Aging Pope Pius visited the tombs of his predecessors in the grottos under St. Peter's tonight and meditated on the place he has chosen for himself.

On the eve of the feast day of St. Peter, the first Pope, Pius XI, now in his eightieth year, knelt at the tomb of Peter and prayed.

He thereby followed a custom of more than 60 years. But tonight's visit was significant in view of the Jope's age and the belief he has expressed that he may not have long to live.

Descends Into St. Peter's.

Only a small group of ecclesiastics and Swiss and noble guards atended him as he descended from his apartments into St. Peter's by an elevator reserved for himself.

All other persons were escorted from the great basilica, the doors were closed and the edifice was illuminated.

Pope Pius walked to the altar of the confession, which is directly over the tomb of St. Peter. There he knelt on the damask-covered steps. He recited the rosary and concluded with some minutes of silent prayer.

Blesses Mantles.

Rising, he went to the small chapel before St. Peter's tomb. This is in a sunken part of the cathedral, where the pavement gives way to a flight of stairs leading to the tomb.

There he blessed the pallia or mantles of lamb's wool worn by archbishops and bishops as the insignia of their rank. They were in a silver box in front of the tomb.

The Pope then entered the grottos of the basilica, where fscores o Popes are buried. He saw the tombs of his immediate predecessor, Benedict XV, who made him a cardinal, and of Pius X.

McCarl Successor Not Yet Announced

By the Associated Press.

A vacancy in a key post of Administration machinery looms 24 hours hence, without indication of who eventually will succeed J. R. McCarl as Comptroller General.

McCarl steps out of the post he has occupied for 14 years at the close of business tomorrow, his term expired. President Roosevelt left the Capital Saturday, making no announcement nor hinting at a successor.

Among several mentioned in Capital talk as possible appointees to the $15,000 post have been Daniel W. Bell, acting Director of the Budget, and Francis J. Carr, of the Tennessee Valley Authority staff, and who worked out several systems of budget control for private firms before entering Government service.

Sanctions Backers Score Baldwinites

London, June 28 (AP).—Opposition leaders denounced the British government as "afraid of its own shadow" today on the seventeenth anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Versailles.

Clement Attlee and Herbert Morrison, Labor Party members, addressed a huge pro-sanctionist meeting in Hyde Park, where thousands of Socialists and Pacifists massed around six platforms.

A resolution was adopted unanimously protesting the imminent lifting of sanctions from Italy and what was termed the British government's evasion of "its obligations for the preservation of peace."

"We are cursed by a government that shivers even if it hears a rumor a foreign dictator has frowned on it," said Morrison.

Asylum Guards Strike; Inmates Free to Escape

Nice, France, June 28 (AP).—The 58 guards of the Municipal Insane Asylum struck today, leaving no way of stopping inmates if they sought to escape.

The prefect of police called an emergency conference and indicated he might summon troops to keep order.
